The clamour of the Spheres (By a Banker.)

The bewitching enchantment and the many and varied beauties of Nature find most prominent expression in the vivid colouring with which. with so lavish a hand, she has adorned and beautified her works. It it he imagined for a moment that this fair earth of ours and everything thereon were all of the same uniform grey tint Every flower, every leaf, every bird, or insect, or onimal, grey; conselves, our hair, our eyes, our features, grey; a grey ser and a grey sky, even the stars and the sun itself, all the self same melancholy and lugubrious, sombre tint. What a dismal, cheerless world would it be, and how different to the joyous and richly adorned beauty and splendour of our radiantly picturesque and attractive planet.

Except a few wide tracts of sandy desert, the entire globe is beautified and embellished in many-hued richness and splendour. The wondrous azure of the skies, diversified at morn and eve with glowing carmine and amethyst, and gold; the deep sapphire of the great ocean, gemmed in diamonds and sparkling rubies, or now reflecting on its heaving surface the fiery ornature of the sinking sun; or the domed canopy of heaven bespangled with a scintillating host of burning suns of varied hues-all this is a picture of beauty and a very joy. And then too the world of flowers.

With what lavish hand has Nature painted these her gifts toward mankind's gratifications, and how richly has she emblazoned and bedecked them in brilliance and in vivid splendour, and shaped them in multiform design and fashion. And birds, many arrayed in a panoply of splendour; trees, most beautiful when about to sink into the dormant sleep of winter, when the varied shades of green are changed to empurpled violet, or burnished copper, or primrose sulphur; the rainbow, many coloured token of peace; or the wondrous aurora, trembling from purple to carmine, or from emerald to sapphire, or, with a throbbing spasm, every pendent column pulsating into a fiery outburst of vermillion or of NORTH OXFORD, ONT. This association near Ingersoll, Ont., has the distinction of being the first this season to touch the 1000 lb, mark as an average milk yield of all the cows. The individual yields are especially satisfactory, two members owning cows giving over 1600 lo. milk. In contrast to this is noticed one cow in herd 18 with only about 400 lb. to her credit.

Herd No. 7 has the remarkably good average of 40.7 lb. of butter North Oxford, Ont., 30 days ending June 21, 1906.
