starts, to St. Patrick's Church grounds, where a beautiful repository was erected for the occasion. Varied and novel in character are the units which constitute the procession. Little girls are there clad in long white veils, signifying that they have attended their first communion. Little boys who have reached the spiritual mile-post wear ribbons and bedges. Then come novices sombrely garbed, followed by grey nuns, and monks clad in coarse brown serge ulsters and wearing sandals. Farther down the line are priests in elaborately embroidered robes of office. Ladies in ordinary attire are there too, ladies of fashion and social standing who march for the time being shoulder to shoulder with women who earn their living by manual labor. Members of various church societies carrying banners and mottoes constitute a large part of the procession.

Finally comes the baldachin, a gorgeous canopy of cloth of gold, beneath which Bishop Racicot walked carrying the Host. Beside him was the Archbishop of Montreal clad in elaborate vestments of his high office. Mount St. Louis Cadets marched beside the baldachin as a guard of honor. At the passing of the Host, all faithful Catholics on the line march silently uncover and fall their knees. Most of the lady's few of them were without their distinct trials. At all the fashionable gatherings the conversation turned, like a needle to the pole, straight to the subject of servants.

Mrs. Baker said very little, for she had often noticed that an announcement of perfect satisfaction in the domestic line was frequently followed later on by a second announcement to the effect that the perfect maid had oeen offered higher wages by Mrs. Soand-so and had gone to get them. Therefore Mrs. Baker followed Brer Rabbit's tactics of "layin' low." More than this, she decided to be very diplomatic. She would offer Maggie more wages herself and thus secure her before any one else had a chance. She was pleased with her plan. "Now, Maggie," she said the next

"If you'll take my tip, gur'not," runs another form of gentle repreach, "you'll go and see an oculist. You 'ailed this bus by mistake. You wants a red or green or yellow bus. Black sin't in your line at all."

"Thank yer, gov'nor," says another cabby, with apparent emotion; "thank yer, kindly. Yer offer is well meant, but I couldn't go for to do it." Saying which he makes a pretense of handing the shilling back to the astonished fare. "But I can't sell him, guy'nor, and that's a fact. Yer 'andsome hoffer'd make me rich for life, but I tell yer I can't sell 'im." One cabby, who was an excellent ac-
