A QUEER CALCULATION

The Power That Would Be Report Statisticians sometimes have for ideas. One of them amused him by calculating how much energy, to and coal it would take to more a certh a foot, supposing that it was jected throughout its mass to a inequivalent to terrestrial gravities This is a gratuitous supposition in spite of its enormous mass the con weighs nothing.

Starting with the fact that a earth's mass is about 6,100 miles million million tons, our statistics exiculates that we should require 600,000,000 years for a 10,000 has power engine to move our globe a la The boiler that should feed this age would vaporise a quantity of wite that would cover the whole face of h globe with a layer 300 feet deep. h vaporisation of this water would a quire 4,000 million-million tons of on This coal, carried in cars beiding to tons each and having a total length of thirty feet, would require 400 miles million cars, which would read & 000,000 times around the earth train, moving at the rate of ten miles an hour, would take more to 5.000,000 years to travel its length. It would require for storigg shed that would cover 1,000 time to area of Europe.

If we realise that this fantacies buge amount of energy is nothing all compared with what the earth to sesses in virtue of its rotation about axis, its revolution about the sm its translation in space with the system, of which the earth is but a infinitesimal part of the universe may get some idea of the impertant of man in the universe and estreet his incommensurable pride at its
