Lindsay Collegiate Institute. 1912-13.

Lindsay Collegiate Institute will re-open for the Fall Term on Tuesday, September 3rd. It is important, in view of the shortened School Year, that Students should be present from the opening day.

The Board of Education has provided a Staff of eleven teachers, of whom eight are Specialists, thus putting each Department and sub-department in charge of a thoroughly competent Specialist.

There is an excellent library in connection with the School, a first-class gymnasium, thoroughly equipped Chemical and Physical laboratories, and the whole building is now heated and ventilated in the most modern and approved manner. There is also a Cadet Battalion of about 125 boys, which was ranked as "easily first" in Eastern Ontario this year.

While the School Authorities aim at the harmonious development of the physical, mental and moral sides of the students' natures, they are especially gratified at the success of the students at the various Departmental examinations this year.

In 1912, twenty-one Faculty or First-class Certificates were won, seven of them with honors, seven Honor Matriculation Certificates, twenty-four Normal Entrance or Second-Class Certificates, twenty-three Pass Matriculation Certificates, one Civil Service, and fifteen Lower School,—a total of ninety. In the past four years sixty-six First-Class Certificates have been obtained by pupils at this Collegiate.

The School provides thorough courses in Agriculture, Commercial Work, Art, for Matriculation, and for Teachers; besides a General Course for those desiring a general education.

BITING A BIVALVE.

Andrew Lang Says It Doesn't Hurt a Live Oyster a Bit.
 The statement that oysters "suffer agonies" when they are ripped from their shells, tortured with vinegar, pepper and other condiments and then eaten, which President Craft of the Alabama state oyster commission is said to have made, is vigorously attacked by Andrew Lang, the famous English naturalist.
 "The bivalve," he says, "is a creature of low sensibility. It does not even pretend to the head development of a limpet or a snail. It lies buried in its mud bank. Active oyster life is represented by currents of water which are swept in and out of its shell. All the rest is purely automatic action. Its nervous system is of low order. A series of three nerve centers or so, scattered through the body, represents its sensitive apparatus. It has no head, no brain mass. It is as nearly as possible a mere molluscan machine which lives and no more."
 "This being so, where does any question of pain intervene? To have pain you must have the consciousness of it to begin with, and a sensory apparatus which feeds the consciousness with intelligence of what is happening to the body at large. You have no more evidence or warrant for presuming the existence of consciousness in the oyster than you have in the case of a jellyfish."—New York World.

Biggest Salary Raise on Record. When the government last July decided to pay $492 per annum to the man who would carry the United States mails between Springfield and Galesburg, Wis., the pay for that work was raised 49,200 times more than it had been the year before. Dunsford had contracted to do the work for $1 cent a year. For this large compensation he or his employee had to take twelve trips a week, traveling thirteen and a half miles a day and spending of 500 pounds of mail each day. He did it for this small sum because he ran a stage line and wanted the privilege of handling the mails.—Pope Magazine.
