What proved to be a lucky change for Mr. S. Tremer, was proven a few days ago. It appears he had taken a load of grain to Cannington and receiving the money, placed it in his trouser's pockets, but on going to bed, instead of hanging his trousers on the bed post, he hung them in a closet, hanging an old pair on the bed, with nothing in them but an old jack-knife. In the morning they were found in a nearby field with the pockets turned inside out, and the knife gone. It is thought that the thief followed him from Cannington after seeing him place the money in his pockets, and being sure that the garments hanging on his bed were the same that he wore during the day, that they still held the prize. The thief did not investigate until after getting out of the house, and it would appear that he did not like to risk going back.

LONGBOAT'S FIVE MILE
INDIAN WON CLEAR-CUT VICTORY.
Longboat was the center of attraction, and when he first appeared on the field and jogged half way around the track, he got an ovation at Halifax. He was about the center of the field throughout the afternoon, throwing the hammer, putting the shot, and throwing the discus. The crowd begged him to start in the mile, and some of them made such insinuating remarks as to his courage, that he was almost inclined to line up, but Tim O'Rourke took him away. He took his position in the five-mile event, however, and yawned, opened his mouth wide, as he went to the scratch. He won a clear-cut victory in this event, and gave a grand exhibition of running, covering the five miles faster than he ever had before.—Toronto Star.
