THE LINDSAY CENTRAL

"The Lindsay Central Fair this year was an unqualified success despite the inclemency of the weather." The remark was made by President John Carew to a Warder reporter; an unqualified success.

The Lindsay Central stands out prominently in the midst of the various fall fairs in the province, as one of the best. It may not be in the same class as Toronto and Ottawa, but it outdistances a very large number of the "lesser lights." Every department was up to the usual standard of efficiency, the educational, agricultural and amusement features harmonizing, with the result that the fair was an "unqualified success."

The success can be attributed to the fact that the leadership was never in better hands than in those of John Carew, the broad-shouldered, affable and energetic lumber king; the popular and enterprising president. He devoted considerable time to the interests of the fair, and during the past month he has supervised the many improvements made to the various buildings and looked after the hundred and one little things that had to be attended to.

Vice-President Jos. Hickson, J. A. Williamson, B. L. McLean, Mayor Begg, E. Hopkins and the other directors, whose increasing endeavors have been crowned with a success that is merely prophetic of the still greater townships that awaited the Lindsay Central Fair, are also deserving of commendation.

Lindsay's Central exhibition this year has triumphed over one big obstacle, that of bad weather. It has achieved a success despite the unfavorable weather of Saturday, and the entire directorate deserve praise. The fair is getting bigger and better every year and no doubt added improvements will be made for the annual event in 1911.

The big fair is over, and it is opportune to extend congratulations to the management.

As a suggestion might it not be a good idea to either hold the fair one week earlier or at least change the days from Thursday, Friday and Saturday, to Wednesday, Thursday and Friday. During the last three or four years it has rained on Saturday, spoiling the attendance, and also the program at the fair.

SAVING ELECTRICITY

Tungsten lamps are coming to the front because they save electricity. In appearance, their only difference from the ordinary carbon filament incandescent lamp is that the filament is constructed of tungsten instead of carbon. But in actual use, it has been proved that they use only about one-third as much current as a carbon lamp to produce a light of the same illuminating power. True, their first cost is greater (approximately three times as much) but this is counterbalanced by the saving in current effected. They have one weak point, however. That is the ease with which the delicate tungsten filament is broken. On this account great care has to be exercised in installing them, and it is for this reason, too, that they cannot be economically used as portable lamps. Yet, when carefully handled, they have a long lease of life. In England, where they are used much more extensively than here, it is quite common for them to last 3,000 hours, and one instance is on record where a tungsten lamp burned continuously for over 15,000 hours. Even when allowance is made for more frequent breakage, the tungsten lamp shows a saving over the carbon of about fifty per cent. That is an economy not to be despised, and points to the much greater use for stationary lighting purposes.

ITS MAJESTY THE APPLE

Good bananas are plentiful at fifteen cents a dozen. Good apples are scarce at two cents apiece. It is Canada's lean fruit year, and the export trade is a heavy drain on the supply of "extra selects," but even in an off season the apple should be more plentiful than now. The reason for its scarcity is suggested by the articles published on apple cultivation. It is somewhat startling to read that the unsprayed orchard produces fruit which is 50 per cent. culls, while only one apple in a hundred is so classified when the trees are properly treated.

Ontario has been prodigal with its orchards. The apple is as fine and as healthy a fruit as nature provides, but the wormy, stunted, and dried up specimens in Peterboro this year are not worthy the name of apple. Most of the orchards of the Province have been let run wild. No attention has been paid to their cultivation. Old trees have not been replaced by young ones. And anyone may see the result by looking in the average grocery store.

Spraying, soil cultivation, and pruning will do wonders with an apple orchard. Sometimes the hogs will help too. There is a species of green fly which lays its eggs under the skin of the growing fruit. These eggs develop into worms, which tunnel in the juicy flesh until the apple falls. It is all a wonderful provision of nature for the propagation of the species, for the worm thus unconsciously calls gravity to its aid in order that it may crawl from the apple into the earth, and there remain during the winter as pupae until spring, when it is transformed into green flies. Thus, in nature's ceaseless round, the pest is perpetuated, unless, indeed, the farmer gathers up his wormy apples, or keeps a hog or two in the orchard to eat them as soon as they fall.

An intelligent campaign against apple destroyers would cut the price of Ontario's apples in half. And the consumer would get sound fruit instead of worms for his money.—Peterboro Times.

"Some Conditions in Britain," is the title of an excellent address delivered recently by Mr. P. D. Ross, of the Ottawa Journal, who was present at the Imperial Press Conference in London, Eng. The address was delivered before the Empire Club of Canada at Toronto, and one particularly striking part of the address was the remarks in regard to the conditions existing in the poorer parts of London, in the slums. This part of his address is well worth printing, and is as follows:

The Press Conference saw the great industries, the great waterways, the great mills, the great educational institutions. I want to hurry to speak of another matter—the reverse side of the picture—the question of paupers, and the unemployed, and of drink and of the slums. The first thing, it seems to me, we have to remember, in discussing a question like that, is that it is a comparative question—that no man is justified in looking on one side of the shield and giving to the world the impression, without examination of the comparative facts, that that is the striking side of the shield. All questions of human distress are comparative in two ways, comparative as regards the conditions which surround them, and comparative as regards efforts which are being made to overcome them. Now, with that as a prelude, I will give you my impressions of what we saw in England, on this question.

We didn't come across much very repulsive. I didn't see a single street that was not better paved than half the streets of any Canadian city I know. The dwellings on the outside did not look distressing. I saw no lanes or alleys which seemed worse than much I have seen in some of our cities; and after school hours the streets were full of children ragged and dirty enough, but not noticeably unhealthy or mean-looking, and so noisy as to indicate ample animal spirits. Considerable numbers of men seemed to be idle, and a good many of them looked under-dressed and useless, but London is a very big city. I saw a worse showing, proportionately, in Manchester and Glasgow, and much worse in Sheffield—in the latter place, masses of dwarfed, half-starved looking people, a very depressing sight. Any one considering only such a portion of the people, might well feel dispirited about the condition. But, anyone who would consider only the one side to the case would be foolish. I would not minimize the distress and the evil and the hopelessness of tens of thousands of people in the great centres of British population. But I would reflect that there are enormously greater masses of sterling human stuff alongside them; and I would remember that these centres are the most densely populated spots of the globe.

All the above is in striking contrast to the observations made by Dr. Macdonald, of the Globe, who also attended the Imperial Press Conference, and who printed his observations in the Globe. He pictured the dark, the poor side of the slums as horrible, that poverty, pauperism, drink, were a cancer eating into England, constituting good cause for apprehension as to England's decadence.

Mr. Ross in his address gives facts and figures to the effect that pauperism is on the decrease in England, and that there is not nearly as much drinking going on as in past years—that the drink bill per head of England is no more than that of United States per head, and that it is less than that of Germany or France or Austria. Then taking the question of health in the Mother Country, which Dr. Macdonald described as "helpless, hopeless and anaemic," Mr. Ross states that the statistic of longevity which are necessarily dependent on the statistics of health, show that the British people are among the healthiest of all nations.

Surely such statistics as are given by Mr. Ross of pauperism, of liquor consumption, of sanitation, of health, of wages, of wealth, indicate anything but that reason exists for alarm about British decadence?

A DAILY THOUGHT.

Begin the day with smiling eyes,
Pursue the day with smiling lips;
Through clouds behold the smiling skies
Up where the laughing sunbeam trips.
Let smiling thoughts within your mind
Drive gloom and cold despair apart,
And promptings of a genial kind
Keep ever glowing in your heart.
Meet trouble with a cheery mien;
Be jovial in the face of care—
He routs all mischief from the scene
Who meets it with a jocular air.
