LADY NORA

is dotted on the inside, and the lock, being an old one, rattles. "Who is there?" Dallas calls sharply, in a half-awake and very cross voice. Yolande's first impulse is to fly from the door and be silent; then comes over her again the renewed longing to speak to him. "It is I, dear—Yolande," she answers in very unsteady, husky tones; and she is terrified to hear him leap out of bed, muttering angrily, and pushing the chairs about as he searches for his dressing-gown. "Oh, it's no matter—never mind! Oh, please don't disturb yourself, dear!" Yolande calls in subdued tones, in an agony of regret and shame and vexation at her own sentimental folly. But her exclamation only has the effect of making Captain Glynn excrete first his slippers, then the fender, as he strikes his foot against it. Limping violently across the room, he unbolts the door with ill-tempered haste. "What on earth's the matter?" he demands. "What is wrong? Yolande, what o'clock is it? What do you want?" "Nothing, dear," Yolande says deprecatingly, wishing almost that the ground might open and swallow her up. "Only I did not know you were asleep, Dallas, dear. I would not have disturbed you if I had thought you were asleep."

"What is it? What is the matter, for heaven's sake?" Dallas cries frantically, shivering. "Just as I was in my first sleep, too! What are you sitting up for until this hour?" he asks more crossly, as he perceives that she is still wearing her dinner-dress, with her warm vicuña shawl wrapped around her. "Because I could not go to sleep, Dallas," Yolande replies tenderly, laying her little ice-cold fingers on his hand, glowing with life and warmth, "until I asked you to forgive me if I wronged you, and to be friends with me—oh, my darling!" "Good gracious!" Dallas exclaims, in wrathful accents. "Is it possible you woke me up in the dead of night and disturbed me in this manner for such infernal nonsense! I wish to goodness you had one ounce of common-sense! You behaved most improperly to me last night—to-night—whatever time it is—and I told you that your conduct would make our separation final if you did not alter it! You didn't choose to alter it, so you must take the consequences!"—and he yawns violently and shivers again, being, in fact, in that sleep-irritability in which a member of the nobler sex can not reasonably be expected to be saintly in word or deed, having been unduly disturbed by the wife of his bosom.

"Oh, Dallas," Yolande pleads, with a stifled cry, clinging to him, "don't speak so cruelly to me! Oh, my love, I could bear it no longer—I grew so miserable and desolate and nervous, thinking of the poor old Earl's death; and I thought I should like to speak to you for a minute, "If you are nervous, why didn't you have your maid to sleep in your room?" Dallas asks curtly, freeing himself from the clasp of her arms. "I can ring for her now if you wish, it is past twelve, I see, and of course in a country household like this everybody was asleep long ago; but that doesn't matter, I suppose." "No, no. I don't want Pitts! I would not disturb her on any account," Yolande says hurriedly, shrinking away, but gazing at him pitifully. "I wish you had been as considerate for me," Dallas rejoins harshly. "You should have gone to bed long ago, and not have sat up giving way to superstitious fancies!" He tells himself that it is only right to reprove her sternly for such childish behaviour, and to give her a smart reminder that she has forfeited her right to worry and disturb him, since, by the decree of her fierce, foolish jealousy, they are to be strangers. And then, although he feels a pang of misgiving at the sight of the wan young face, the large, dark, piteous eyes gazing longingly after him from the gloomy background of the huge dimly-lit room, he shuts the door, and leaves her alone—alone, to weep through the live-long night, to sit there in the cold and darkness, when the candles burn out about two o'clock. The desolate, timid girl, a stranger amongst strangers, sick and faint with nervous terrors, apart from her other misery, broods in an arm-chair wrapped up in a shawl.

Then, to preserve appearances, Yolande takes off her pretty black-lace and amber-satin dress, which she put on with such innocent pleasure and vanity, and wrapping herself in a warm flannel dressing-gown, creeps shuddering into the snowy depths of the huge ice-cold bed. There, in spite of cold and misery, she falls into a deep sleep of exhaustion. Pitts wakes her at half-past eight.

"I have caught a bad cold, I think, and don't feel well enough to go down this morning, Pitts," she tells the maid, who acquiesces, with a glance at her young mistress's swollen eyelids. "And, after breakfast, you must pack my trunks, Pitts," Yolande continues, with a vain attempt to speak clearly and pleasantly. "I shall return to London to-day." "I thought you would," Pitts says to herself. "Captain Glynn and I arranged it last night," she goes on, in a business-like tone, "and decided that it was better I should go back to Rutland Gardens, and stay there until he can leave Pentreath."

"I wonder when that will be," Pitts thinks indignantly. "When that Miss Murray goes, I suppose! Oh, the falseness of men! And she hasn't a bit of spirit, poor little thing, to stand up for herself! Catch me puttin' up with a husband like that!" After breakfast comes an ordeal which Yolande dreads and shrinks from, but to which she is obliged to submit in her helplessness and friendlessness—a visit from mademoiselle, the meek dependent, who, while ostensibly Lady Maria's nurse and companion, is in reality the mistress of the house and every one in it. She glides in, in her pale-grey gown and her Puritan bands and kerchief, with a bright smile and sweet words of sympathy.

With downcast eyelids, she hears all Yolande has to say, acquiesces meekly, and arranges everything for her immediate departure without one unpleasant comment or question. Indeed, Yolande wishes vexedly to mention to her the feeling of sympathy which she has for her, as she is called in the Pentreath household, would evince some little natural surprise and inquisitiveness on the subject of this sudden journey, this parting of a newly wedded pair; but mademoiselle seems possessed only with the idea that Yolande has caught a bad influenza cold and is obliged to go post-haste to London to nurse herself.

"I could not resist that one small job at her expense," mademoiselle says to herself, laughing heartily. "When I fully expect and intend that he and Joyce Murray will flirt to their hearts' content all day long and every day, now that the green-eyed monster—poor Yolande—is out of the way." She smooths the way, explaining and arranging everything so deftly that, when Yolande is dressed, she has nothing to do but to say "Good-bye" to every one, including her husband.

Lady Maria is very kind and full of sympathy for Yolande's evident illness, and urges her, when in London, to see a favorite "specialist" of hers—Doctor Sutherland Smith.

CRIME OF NOAH HALE.

He Shot and Killed His Son and Wounded His Wife.

TRAGEDY NEAR SAULT STE. MARIE Mrs. Hale Was Living With Her Boy For Protection From Her Husband—After Murdering His Son and Wounding His Wife Hale Started For the Bush—Not Yet Captured. Sault Ste. Marie, Ont., Oct. 4.—Noah Hale, a farmer of Korah township, about six miles from Sault Ste. Marie, shot and killed his son Frank, a young man about 25 years of age, and wounded his wife in the arm, leaving her for dead. Friction existed in the family and Mrs. Hale left her husband to live with her son. Hale possesses a violent temper, and after a quarrel two weeks ago his wife appeared against him in the Police Court. He was bound over to keep the peace, and since then has been in an ugly mood towards the family. Yesterday morning Hale left his home on his murderous mission before daylight. His daughters did not know he was out of the house till they got up to prepare breakfast. He returned about this time in an excited state and carrying his gun. He left the house, saying he was going to bring in the cows, and has not been seen since. The daughters think the murderer appeared at the home of Frank Hale, where the mother was stopping, he raised his gun without giving warning, and the charge entered the young man's body. The murderer then fired at his wife, who fell unconscious, and Hale probably left with the impression that he had killed her. Mrs. Hale recovered consciousness, however, and made her way to a neighbor's house, where she raised an alarm. The police of the Soo were at once notified and a large number of the countryside are in pursuit, with small chances of taking the murderer alive. He is certain to take poison or kill himself with his gun. The murderer is an Englishman by birth and is about 65 years of age. He has been a resident of Korah township for a number of years. The crime of Catarrh and other prevalent conditions which pave the way for Consumption—that successful method evolved by America's greatest scientific physician, Dr. T. A. Slocum, whose great liberality, through his Free Trial Treatment, sent broadcast throughout this broad land, has contributed most to the root of the most potent agency in the destruction of human life in this hemisphere.

His Free System of Treatment has arrested the hand of death in the cases of thousands of consumptives and has prevented the disease in countless instances. The Slocum Treatment consists of four distinct remedies for the cure of Consumption, Weak Lungs, Bronchitis, Catarrh, and all pulmonary and wasting diseases, and is based upon principles essential to the correction of function, the rebuilding of the tissues, the overthrow of parasitic animal organisms and the estabishment of health in all the departments of the human body. The four preparations embody all the necessary elements of a complete treatment for Consumption—its cure and prevention—as well as for most of the chronic and wasting ills of life. Apparently hopeless cases are cured by their timely use. These free remedies comprise the great curative forces discovered by the eminent physician, Dr. Slocum, they represent the acme of the pharmacist's skill and with them will be found explicit directions for their use in any case. You are invited to test what this system will do for you, if you are sick, by writing for a FREE TRIAL TREATMENT of the Four Free Preparations will be forwarded you at once with complete directions for use. Simply write to the T. A. Slocum Company, Limited, 170 King Street West, Toronto, giving post office and express address, and the free medicine (the Slocum Cure) will be promptly sent. Persons in Canada seeing Slocum's offer in American papers will please send for samples to Toronto.

To Search the Stream For the Weapon Used by Murderer. Niagara Falls, Oct. 4.—There are no new developments in the Franks murder case. If the police have found anything, they are keeping it quiet. A. E. Fleming, brother of the deceased woman, returned home to El Paso, Illinois, last evening, but before leaving, stated positively that he would return shortly, and would have the creek at Chippewa searched, where the weapon that the fender killed his sister with is supposed to have been thrown. The means employed will be a powerful magnet. The creek is fully 100 feet wide and about 10 feet deep, and runs from the Niagara River, up through the village, and will afford no easy task.

KILLED BY A TRAIN. Robert Stewart, a Brookville Cattle-Buyer, Meets Death Thursday.

Smith's Falls, Oct. 4.—Robert Stewart, a traveler for the George Matthews Company, of Ottawa, lost his life on the C.P.R. track, about three miles south of here, Thursday evening. He was a well-known buyer of live stock. When the 7 o'clock train reached Jasper Thursday night he got off, presumably thinking it was Smith's Falls, and then started to walk up the track the intervening five miles. The express going to Brookville ran him down. He was instantly killed. He was a married man, about 44 years of age, and lived at Brookville.

SIR WILFRID IN LONDON. Will Open the New Produce Exchange at Liverpool.

London, Oct. 4.—Premier, Laurier and Finance Minister Fielding of Canada have returned here from Paris, and, yesterday, called at the Colonial Office and reported the results of their interviews with the officials of the French Foreign Ministry. The Premier will open the new Produce Exchange at Liverpool, Oct. 7, and will sail for Canada, Oct. 8.

Reid Arbitration Cases. St. John's, Nfld., Oct. 4.—The hearing in the Reid arbitration case closed last evening with addresses by counsel for both sides. The arbitrators will begin private sittings to-day preparatory to making their award. The announcement of the decision is not expected for a week or ten days. Mr. Reid, a railroad contractor, has claims against Newfoundland, aggregating $2,000,000. The matter has been referred to arbitration, and the arbitration tribunal began its sitting at St. John's, Sept. 4.

Ottawa Fare Boxes Robbed. Ottawa, Oct. 4.—E. Gagnon, a street car conductor, was arrested last night by Detective Robillard, on the charge of stealing from a fare box. Gagnon admitted his guilt. On his person was found a very ingenious digger, similar to those produced in the courts in the Toronto cases. Gagnon would not tell where he got the digger.

CONSUMPTION CAN BE CURED

EDITOR'S NOTE.—The Slocum System of Treatment for the cure of Consumption, Pulmonary Troubles, Catarrh, General Debility, and nearly all the ills of life, is medicine reduced to an exact science by the world's foremost specialist. By its timely use thousands of apparently hopeless cases have been permanently cured. The Emulsion of Cod Liver Oil is needed by some, the Tonic by others, the Expectant by others, the Oxojell by others still, and all one, may be used singly or in combination, according to the needs of the case. Full instructions with each set of four free remedies illustrated here. Our readers are urged to take advantage of Dr. Slocum's generous offer.

THE FREE TRIAL

The honor of this effectively arresting the progress of this fatal malady rests with the wonderful system of treatment which has been reduced to an exact science for the cure of Consumption and for the cure of Catarrh and other prevalent conditions which pave the way for Consumption—that successful method evolved by America's greatest scientific physician, Dr. T. A. Slocum, whose great liberality, through his Free Trial Treatment, sent broadcast throughout this broad land, has contributed most to the root of the most potent agency in the destruction of human life in this hemisphere.
