THE GOOD-ROADS PROBLEM

Each of the three methods proposed for dealing with the good-roads problem in this town has a large element of fairness in it. Neither of the three is wholly without inequitable features; and yet it seems that if good streets are to be made one of these three methods must be adopted. The methods are:

Let each street pay for its own repairs. Add the cost of all repairs to the rate for the year in which they are made.

Raise a large sum by the sale of debentures and repair selected streets.

It will be seen that the last two methods coincide to the extent that the cost of repairing whatever streets are selected will be paid by the whole town, whereas if the first method is adopted the streets repaired will bear the whole cost of those repairs. Of course in the long run this method would result similarly to the others for those who pay to repair the streets on which they live will not help to repair other streets. To decide which of these plans is the most equitable is a nice problem for the long evenings now approaching.

If each street pays for its own repairs, those who live on streets that require little or cheap repairs will get off more lightly than those who live on the streets that will cost more to build. At first glance that looks reasonable; for is that not the basis upon which all taxes are levied? Those who live in parts of the town which are most valuable, pay the most taxes. On the other hand, when it is considered that all have equal access to all the streets does it not seem fair that all should contribute in the same proportion to the cost of building them? That is, the whole cost of cheap and dear streets alike should be spread over the whole town.

If the second plan is adopted that will be accomplished for then the cost of repairing any street will be added to the general taxation for the year in which the repairs are made. Then all will pay, and the whole citizenship will be taxed generally for the streets of the town of which they are citizens. But in that case, only a short strip could be made in any one year by any reasonable or possible addition to the rate. There it would take a long time to get many streets done and most of the people would be paying for roads built in parts of the town remote from them, and complete their span of life before any macadam appeared in front of their doors. Moreover, the streets built under that plan would be fully paid for by the present property-holders who would thus make a rather too-generous donation to posterity.

This last objection would be largely overcome by adopting the plan of raising money by debentures payable during a term of years; and the longer that term, the more fully would the objection be met. It can of course be urged against this method, as it can against any that requires the whole town to contribute proportionately, that while the people living on all the streets pay, only some of the streets can be built. That objection can be most fully met by issuing bonds for a large rather than for a small sum of money. The larger the sum raised, the more streets will be built and the number of those who pay and get no work done, correspondingly reduced.

So then it seems that a large sum spread over a long term will best meet the case. Likely the more the people whose streets are named for improvement, the better the chance has the bylaw of carrying. Perhaps $60,000 to be repaid in 40 years would not burden the taxpayer of today any more than $30,000 payable in 20 years; and it would have the quite important advantage that most of the people who were paying to have roads built would get roads built and the whole body of citizens enjoy the enormous advantage of going about on decent thoroughfares while they are able to go about at all. This article has at least stated some phases of the problem now before the town.

CHURCH NOTES

—Rev. J. W. Macmillan preached a sermon last Sunday night about Prisons and Prisoners. This was a strong sermon on an unusual theme. On Monday night a very interesting meeting of the Young People's Society was held.

—The Powles' Corners correspondent of the Fenelon Falls Gazette says: There is to be a fowl supper here about the middle of November. The correct date will be given next week. Some of the good people here were in favor of a free-will offering, but there are a considerable number of young people who never put their shoulders to the wheel, and are always on the look-out for a big time, and they are the ones who are in favor of a fowl supper. Such a mean way of raising money for the building up of God's kingdom on earth is not pleasing and acceptable to Him.

QUEEN-ST. METHODIST

—A large congregation listened to Rev. A. J. H. Strike preach last Sunday night at Queen-st. A contributed outline of the evening sermon is as follows:

The text both in morning and evening was Genesis 22: 16 and 17. "Because thou hast done this thing, blessing I will bless thee." Abraham had been half-hearted in the service of God. He lacked faith, a testing hour came. God often allows his people to get into a terrible struggle and after they are tested it means more loyalty to God and a fuller consecration to his service. Examples: Jacob, Joseph, Daniel, David, John the Baptist, Peter, Paul for John it was desolate Patmos, for Christ the cross. Anything less than the best we have, will not bring the rich blessing of God.

Abraham was ordered to offer his only child. It is discipline God's children require. God did not want the sacrifice of Isaac; he wanted the whole heart and soul of Abraham. It is when we have given up everything that God blesses us most. He blessed Abraham with prosperity after he had been tested. So he did Job. Abraham was signally blessed with spiritual knowledge—from Mt. Moriah he saw Calvary's hill. Sacrifice is of the essence of the gospel. He saw that higher mound upon which the Son of Man was crucified, which he promised and made of Abraham's posterity a great nation. Christ came from it. God requires two things at our hands: 1. To conquer the world, that is to civilize it, and 2. To overcome all moral evil, that is to Christianize the world. The half-hearted lukewarm man or woman is a great detriment to God's cause. God requires a whole-hearted service. Next Sunday morning the quarterly services will begin at 10.30. After the love-feast, the sacrament of the Lord's Supper will be administered. In the evening the pastor will give a temperance address. Special music will be provided.

CAMBRIDGE-ST. METHODIST

—Anniversary services were held at the Cambridge-st. Methodist church on Sunday. Rev. Dr. J. V. Smith, formerly pastor of the Metropolitan church, Toronto, but now of Carlton-st. church, was the preacher.

At night Dr. Smith's text was "Arise and shine, for thy light is come." Is. 60: 1. Isaiah was described as "a prince amid a generation of princes, the prophet of the forward look, before whose eyes was spread the enchanted landscape of a regenerated earth." There were people who always talked of the good days of old. Milton sang: "For if such raptured song, Entrance our spirits long, Time will run back, And fetch the age of gold."

Now men tell of the days Pericles in Athens, Augustus in Rome, and Elizabeth in England. There is no need, said the preacher, to run back to fetch the age of gold. There never was a more golden age than the present. There has broken around us the dawn of a diviner era than the world has ever known before. God rules the world. If we had been flung into the seething sea of irresponsible forces life would not be worth living. Some brood on the increase of evil over good, and see no hope till Christ himself shall come with some power that his gospel does not possess. By such my spirit is stirred with indignation. Viewed in the light of the divine plan, evil is only temporary and accidental. It is the brief discord that leads up to and will enhance the final great harmony of the universe. The angels knew sin would enter the world, yet they sang together at the world's creation. They sang because they knew, also, that the world would be redeemed from sin and all would come right at last. That is the proper interpretation of the sin and sorrow of the world. The swelling tides of God's grace will yet bear this old world into the haven of harmony and peace.

The outlook is good. "Arise and shine for thy light is come." These words are to the church of to-day. "Thy light is come"; that is the light of great opportunity has come.

"The church has a chance to shine in proclaiming the brotherhood of man. All the great questions of land, labor, liquor and the Sabbath are confronting the church. New spheres are being opened up by the agitation of the times. There has come a new era for ethics as well as for theology. The church is having her social mission forced upon her. The time has come when the teaching of the New Testament must be applied to the burning questions of to-day. Men are more aware of each other's presence and more perplexed by it, than ever before. They are at a loss to know what to do with each other. The solution of these questions cannot be found apart from the gospel. The spiritual is deeper than economics; character is more a thing of soul than surroundings; but yet the physical conditions of men have a tremendous effect upon their destiny. God is launching economic missions to men. He has his heralds in Marks, Bell, Burns and Mitchell—these men may not speak our shibboleths but they are doing a
