WHEN SUMMER DIED

When Summer died and Autumn's steps were heard

Approaching in the sear and stilly vale,

The yellow maples blazed upon the hills,

Faint were the notes of each departing bird,

Some flowers perished in each wanton gale.

But gave in turn their treasures to the rills

Which laughed to bear away each galleon.

Our cherished fondest hopes afar were hurled

By bleaker winds that blew that fatal day.

She looked out past the purple sunset skies-

The tender light went out from her bright eyes

And Summer died along the darkling land.

We saw a beckon from her lily hand,

The gold from wooing sunbeams they had won,

When Summer died along the blue-rimmed world,

A chill breeze swept the last pale rose away-
