The "Air Treatment" Recommended by U. S. Bulletin. Predisposition and Cause of Milk fever. Symptoms. Treatment.

The U. S. Farmers' Bulletin No. 45 is a valuable circular for dairy men. It will prove as useful to Canadian farmers and dairymen as to the particular constituency for which it was prepared...

The common name for this malady—milk fever—is an erroneous and misleading one, as in reality fever is usually absent; instead there is generally an actual reduction in body temperature.

Milk fever is a disease of well-nourished, plethoric, heavy milking cows. It occurs during the most active period of life (fourth to sixth calf), and is characterized by its sudden onset and the complete paralysis of the animal with loss of sensation...

PREDISPOSITION AND CAUSE. There are few cases among our domesticated animals regarding the exact cause of which more widely different theories have been advanced than that of milk fever.

SYMPTOMS. This disease, in its typical and most common form, is comparatively easy to diagnose and one which almost every dairymen knows immediately before the arrival of the veterinarian.

dom noticed a rise of temperature. Sometimes at the commencement of the attack the temperature may reach 103 degrees F., but there is a steady decrease to as low as 95 degrees F. as the disease progresses.

TREATMENT In the administration of medicine by the mouth, and especially drenches, great care should be taken to prevent the fluids from getting into the larynx...

THE NEW AIR TREATMENT. Of all known methods of treating milk fever the injection of sterile atmospheric air into the udder is by far the most simple and practicable...
