A Woman Play is Henry Selton Merriman's Play, "With Edged Tools"

The question whether a father has the right to dictate to his son in the all-important step of his life, his marriage, depends a good deal upon the father, and, to a great extent, upon the son. Sir Jon Merewich certainly would be considered eligible as an arbiter in the matter of his son's happiness both by reason of his own unfortunate experience and his consummate knowledge of his son's character. But he has moulded that character in his own image until, equally with him, the son evinced all his pride, obstinacy and "noblesse oblige" characteristics and could in no way be blamed for the stand he took in the matter. To him Millicent Chyne stood for all that was elegant and ideal. Not that he loved her, he thought he did, but his upbringing had not conduced to a profound knowledge of the intricacies of "Le Grande Passion." He mistook a keen admiration for the lovely girl, moving in his own circle, perfectly gowned and mannered and cultured in the acts of philanthropy, for the deeper feeling. He had never been allowed to know better. Sir John knew better, certainly, but then, Sir John was seventy, and the bitter experiences of his own error made him anxious to secure the welfare of his son. And the woman? Millicent Chyne liked Jack Meredith in the way a child likes a brilliant bauble. He was the fashion, and the fact that possibly a dozen mothers would have liked him for their daughters gave her a possession of him an added zest. She disliked Sir John, and the fact that he disliked her made her the more keen to demonstrate her power. She was shallow, but she was beautiful and cunning, with every trick of the charmers art at her finger ends, as the French so eloquently express it "au bout des ongles." Yet, she was not quite clever enough. Her vanity, her worldliness, proved her undoing. It is true she separated father and son temporarily - disturbed the peace of the one, and sent the other into the wilds of Africa in search of the "holy grail" of commerce, the priceless simian; but she did not allow for the miraculous contrivance, the inevitable readjustments of providence that seems in this work-a-world world of ours. She could not for victory remained with Sir John. Whether Millicent Chyne deserved the punishment meted out to her - that of being ignominiously rejected by both the lovers, and practically relegated to the undusted shelf - is a matter of opinion. She should be judged by her disappointment which proved to be that of a woman who has lost, not some one she held dear, but something. Jack Meredith's position was more to her than Jack Meredith himself. "With Edged Tools," the most popular of the Merriman novels, has proved a staunch success, especially with women. It may be that women understand, better than men, the subtleties of the situation, for it concerns them deeply. The judgment on Millicent Chyne is in the hands of the women of the audience, and in the instance of "With Edged Tools," at least, the verdict has been complimentary to man. "With Edged Tools" sparkles with the Merriman wit, and has every element of the Merriman spirit of romance, and the dramatic. It has had a run of one thousand performances in England, and is here represented by the entirely English Company that has been brought over. This great play will appear at the Academy of Music on Friday, Oct. 6.

St. Andrew's, Niagara-on-the-Lake, Built 117 Years Ago.

St. Andrew's Presbyterian Church, Niagara-on-the-Lake, which celebrated its 117th anniversary recently, besides a record of longevity, has a history full of unusual incidents, and has been intimately connected with important national events. It is today one of the most interesting spots in the province. During the war of 1812-14 the building was burned, in September, some months before the town was destroyed by the enemy, in December, 1813. The congregation met for some years in the schoolhouse, which was repaired for this purpose. In this building was held the first Sunday School in the town, all denominations taking part. The Rev. John Burns, the first teacher of the Grammar School, was the pastor at intervals from 1804 to 1817, preaching alternately there and at Stamford. In 1830 a subscription for a new church was started, which reached 2760, the building to seat 600. This is the solid brick structure now standing with old-fashioned, square pews and a high, handsome pulpit, perhaps the only one of the kind in the province. The old church, though still in good preservation, has had many rude shocks to sustain - the roof taken off by a tornado, twice struck by lightning. Its people have had many a struggle to maintain the house of God built by their fathers. It was remarked that although on the north wall a tablet is placed with the words "The Minister's burying place," in all the hundred and seventy years, no minister of the church has died in the town, and the plot is empty, but for an infant of a day. St. Andrew's has never had a load of debt in the eighty years of the existence of the present church, and it was not intended to use the present occasion for raising money, but a summer resident with a generous heart asked if there was any debt, and being told the amount, $350, offered, if the congregation would raise half the amount he would provide the other half. A subscription was opened in the congregation, which was liberally and heartily responded to. Besides this the collection in the church was large, and the treasurer announced that over $500 was contributed in all.

The Eskimo Sealer. The Eskimo method of hunting seals shows a primitive calling improved to a fine art. When a seal is discovered the direction of the wind is at once noted. Then the hunter, keeping himself to the leeward of the seal, walks up to within about a quarter of a mile of it. Beyond this he begins to crouch and advances only when the seal's head is down.

Now, as the seal is one of the most wide-awake of animals and has the habit of throwing up its head quickly every few seconds to guard against danger, it follows that the Eskimo has to be extremely alert if he would get his seal. When the seal's head is down upon the ice its eyes are shut and it is said that in these brief intervals it takes its sleep.

The hunter, by carefully watching the seal's movements, is able within about two hundred yards of it, but is able to approach still nearer by dragging himself forward on his elbows. This manoeuvring continues for some time, until the distance between man and beast has been reduced to a few yards. When not enough to make a sure shot, the Eskimo takes his bow and arrow from his side and sends a swift shaft through the head of his outwitted companion. Sometimes, instead of the seal's head, a harpoon is used with equal effect.

Valuable Concessions. The far-sightedness of the old Hudson Bay factors in selecting land and posts at the most strategic points, is now reaping fortunes for the company. One hundred acres selected at Winnipeg brought an enormous amount.

An interesting review of the condition under which the Hudson Bay Co. secured this land from the Dominion Government.

Under the deed of surrender dated July 18th, 1870, the Hudson Bay Co. relinquished all their rights in the Northwest. In lieu of this the Dominion Government gave them $1,600,000, and allowed them to select one-twentieth of all the surveyed land in the Northwest, south of Saskatchewan River at Edmonton, giving them 80 years in which to select this.

And forty years of the fifty-year term have elapsed, and the company have still many thousands of acres of this land to select.

In addition to the above grant, the company was allowed to select 50,000 acres around all its posts in the Northwest. This land was to be laid out and located within twelve months from the date of surrender. This means that the land around the posts was to be selected by July, 1871.

Of the 50,000 acres, the company located only 45,160 acres. Whether the company still have the right to select the balance, 4,840 acres, is a matter that is being now argued at Ottawa.

PARLIAMENT CALLED. DATE IS NOVEMBER 18, BUT MAY BE CHANGED. Ottawa, Oct. 1. - The Canada Gazette contains notice calling parliament pro forma for Saturday, November 18. As the proclamation does not state that the House will meet for "despatch of business," the date can be changed to meet the views of the new government. A new parliament always meets on a Wednesday, and November 8 or November 15 are regarded as the most likely dates on which the House will meet.

FINGERS AMPUTATED. Mr. Robt. Stephens, twenty-three years of age, a young Englishman, had three fingers crushed so badly in a machine which he was operating at Madison William's foundry on Friday last that amputation of each at the first joint was required.

Has Seen Active Service with the Pen and Sword. (Toronto News) he had answered "the call" in the Fenian Raid troubles where he won recognition, the Colonel buckled on his armor, honed his Damascus blade and with his favorite charger impatient beneath him, headed for the latest scene of conflict. It happened to be the other side of the world. But no matter. He constituted himself a "free lance." He pitched into the problem of railway transport up from the Cape; was appointed assistant to Inspector-General Settle on the lines of communication; promoted to be Chief of Intelligence staff to the same General, Sir Charles Warren captured him to perform identical duties in Griqualand and Bechuanaland and he later headed a mounted brigade for the same territory.

His brother-in-peace is James L. Hughes, inspector of schools, Toronto. Religiously he prefers Methodism. Politically it is stated by close friends, that he leans away from Liberalism. And his home address is Lindsay.

Fort William, Oct. 1. - Mr. Jas. Conmee has declared that he will not be a candidate for the House of Commons at the deferred election to be held on October 12, and as there is no other candidate to face J. J. Carrick he will be declared elected on Thursday, the 5th.

In a letter to the press Mr. Conmee says: "Owing to the change of Government at Ottawa, and having regard to my condition of health, I do not feel disposed to accept the nomination."

When the bugle called. If a man's mind is fully occupied he has no time to be miserable. It's a question which are worse - shortcomings or long stayings.
