The subject was "Lot's Choice." The preacher declared that the great characters of the old testament dimuch to make history and have their counterparts in the men of to-day. The same temptation, love, hate and hope are manifested. Lot and Abraham parted after their cattlemen had quarrelled. Lot had his choice and went toward Sodom. Crises do not make character, they disclose it; they are usually not great but small events. Cities have been the centres of ease and will be till the New Jerusalem appears. "Lot pitched his tent toward Sodom."next chapter says he was "in Sodom," and later he was "sitting in the gate," that is he was mayor of Sodom. Note the progression. What did he do for himself, his family, for Sodom? Of himself it says his soul was vexed, so he did not find happiness; his family got mixed up in the cities wickedness and when he warned them "he seemed to mock." Many a man considers the temporal advantage of his children at the sacrifice of their eternal welfare. ## Academy of Music

-A very good house enjoyed a laughable two hours of nonsense in "Two Jolly Companions" on Saturday night. See the Game Keeper tenight. It is a fine play, and the company comprises three stars. -A small house attended the Aiulf

Hjorvard concert on Friday night. Those who were there discovered what a good player can do on a poor instrument. The grand piano had failed to follow Mr. Hjorvard to this out-of-the-way place, and so he pounded out the classics on the old Academy ivories. The two or three hammers that struck the rosewood back instead of the erstwhile wires. made a novel if not charming variation in the music. Good judges say the player is undoubtedly a fine pianist. Mr. Quintano the violinist, was excellent, and did much to make known the wonderful powers of the instrument he played. Miss Mansfield sang well. She evidently felt e effect of empty seats. Her song in French (?). made the man who knew no other think there was no language like the English for a good song: It is a pity these artists could not have been heard by more people under better circumstances.
