An Outline of How Portland Cement be Used For That Purpose In a recent speech before the Farmers' Institute of St. John N. B., Mr. T. G. Raynor of Rose Hall, Ont., gave an address on the use of Portland cement for stable flooring. A synopsis supplied by Mr. F. W. Hodson is as follows :

In a country where lumber is comparatively cheap, concrete is not likely to come into general use for making walls of barns, but for flooring it is without question the best and cheupest stretonce that can be employed. Its first quality is datableit. Proper'y put down it is practically indistructible. Then it is water tight, and w all the liquid voidings or the rimals and this in farm practice todat is a most important matter. Fully 50 per cent. of the fertifizing value of the manure is in the liquid portion. y having concrete floors and using nty of absorbents this can all be saved and put on the land where it will do most good. Concrete is a misture of clean grabacksche, lame or weak back, gravel, vel or pure sand and cement. There Bright's disease, diabetes, dropsy, and all are several kinds of cement. In Onkidney, bladder and urinary troubles of tario they have natural rock cement, young or old. @ If your back or kidneys which is manufactured at Queenston bother you, just try Dr. PITCHER'S BACK- and Thorold, and this while not as ACHE KIDNEY TABLETS. They'll convince strong as Portland cement, is cheapyou they're good by curing you. Price er and does very well. In some sections the Portland cement will be Laying concrete floors does not require skill which an intelligent farmer cannot supply. First make a solid smooth floor, 12ft square, two inch lumber preferred. Then a box without a bottom should be made in which to mix the gravel and cement. This can be made of such a size as to accurately measure the gravel or sand. The gravet and cement are then put into this box in the proportion required, the box taken of and the mixing of cement and gravel or sand thoroughly done with a sho-It should be shovelled over twice at any rate, while it is dry, and shovelled up into a cone; then before applying the water the cone should be pulled down making the mixture in the form of a ring, leaving a hollow in the centre bare to the floor. Into this water should be poured and dry gravel and cement turned from the outside of the ring to the centre. This will be pulled out again from the centre and more water added until the mixture becomes of the consistency of thick porridge, so it will run down but not be soft. The proportions in which gravel or cement can be used depends somewhat upon the strength of the cement. With good Portland cement, one part of cement to six or seven of gravel could be used for the lower part of cement to two of clean sand. If an extra hard finish is required use equal parts of cement and sand. Before laying the stable floor a good foundation should be prepared. It should be made firm and solid by the addition of gravel or small stones thoroughly pounded down and the floor shaped as is required for the stable. It is best to have a slight slope from the manger to the gutter, The plan of cow stable which is generally preferred has a square gutter two feet wide and eight inches below the level of the stall floor. This gutter is first made and the cement laid in it. Then a board mould is put up and the cement put in behind the boards and the boards left there till the cement gets firm. In laying concrete only as much as can be conveniently reached, say a piece four feet square should be laid at one time. All the studding necessary in the construction of the stalls should be set on flat stones and the cement put around them, Great care should be taken when laying cement to thoroughly pound it down. After the floor is finished it should be sprinkled with water especially if the weather is dry. This should be done every day for a a month to six weeks lor a floor to month. It will probably take ;rom harden properly, and sufficiently to use, and it will not become thoroughly hard for six or seven months alter having been put in. Large stones can and should be used in the construction of a concrete wall, if pains are taken to see that they are covered with at least two inches of cement on either side. A concrete wall one foot thick is sufficiently strong to carry any barn. This makes a thoroughly warm and dry stable wall. Fine stones from a stone crusher is an excellent material from which to make concrete. A barrel of rock cement will lay 55 square feet of 4 in. floor. Good qua'ities of Portland should do more than that. By the use of corrugated sleepers made like railway rails it is quite practicable to make a good floor which would form the ceiling of the story below. The sleepers should preferably be made of iron, and laid sufficiently close to make the structure solid. Such a floor prevents any leakage through to the space
