EXPERT ADVISES $19,000 FILTER FOR THE LINDSAY WATERWORKS

Mr. Weston, the Boston Expert, Reports that Our Scougog Water Supply Needs and Justifies that Outlay

The water supply of this town has for a year been quite a problem, a problem that has chafed chiefly the thinking apparatus of the commissioners. The rest of our citizens have to some extent escaped its worry by having recourse to other beverages. The look and odor of the water last winter and the formidable named live stock that the Toronto expert declared to be the cause of these things brought matters to a crisis, in the minds of the commissioners. This was not chiefly because of the havoc that the aforesaid reptile life in the water would work with the internal economy of those rash enough to use it as a beverage, but more particularly because of the fact that so many citizens declined to take the risk of drinking it that the revenue fell off. That was what worried the commissioners.

But worry does not necessarily mean hurry. It doesn't with the commissioners. It was in the middle of last winter that the odor and flavor of the water threatened the existence of our population, but it was not till a few weeks ago that the commissioners got an expert to examine the situation, and only on October 25th did the expert's report reach the commissioners, and from that time till yesterday that report lay in the obscurity of the superintendent's office until it was dug up by the reporter of the Watchman-Warder. But the commissioners are very soon going to hold a meeting to consider it.

Mr. Weston's report is likely to give our citizens as bad a shock as did the discovery last winter that they were drinking the streptococcus and other caterpillars. It declares that the Scougog water needs filtering very badly, and that to do it the way it ought to be done, a $19,000 filter plant is necessary. Mr. Weston advises the slow filter system. His plan provides for digging out a quarter of an acre deep enough to put a gravel bottom with 40 inches of sand on top of it, and then keep 4 feet of water on top of that. The whole expanse is to be covered with a masonry or concrete roof supported by pillars. This is all to be above the river level, and the water is to be pumped up into it or rather into a little basin in one corner of it 20 feet long, 10 wide and 4 deep. In this basin is a device for scattering the water as it falls in, and the idea is to expose it to the air to get rid of its odor, and get oxygen into it.

The quarter-acre bed will filter a million gallons in 24 hours. It is reckoned that by 1920 the town will require to have that much filtered every day. Copious extracts from the report will be published later.

RAILWAY MAPS.

They Are a Valuable Aid and Guide to the Traveling Public.

Robert Louis Stevenson, one of the most notable English writers known to the present generation, was wont to say that nothing interested him more than the perusal of a good map, and without doubt a map that is well made and accurate catches the eye and arrests the attention of many people as few other things can do.

The men in charge of railway traffic possess a most positive appreciation of this fact, and a large expenditure of time and skillful thought is made on this feature of railway publicity.

Said an official of the Chicago and Northwestern railway while taking on this subject: "There is no doubt that the American railway map engraver has carried his art well nigh to the borders of perfection. I do not know of any road maps or other detailed data for the state of Wisconsin, for instance, that equal those published by our passenger department, showing the haunts of summer tourists and fishermen. They are on file in public libraries as part of their reference records. Other portions of the western country have been similarly taken up by our people and maps of a most complete character made for them—in fact, the western lines are fully alive to the value of a good map in the hands of the traveler. The map publishing business of the large railway systems is today reduced to scientific principles and handled in a most systematic manner."

MEN WITH LONG HAIR.

When British Soldiers Were First Forbidden to Wear Curly.

Matthew of Westminster tells us that in 1127 Henry I. ordered all the soldiers of England to cut their hair a proper length and not wear it like women. This custom of wearing hair like women rose, according to William of Malmesbury, in the reign of William the red king. Young men, he says, then endeavored to rival women in delicacy of person, to imitate their gait, to walk with loose gesture and half naked.

Anselm in 1102 enacted that clerks who had long hair should be compelled to have it cropped so as to show part of the ears and the eyes. William of Malmesbury does not mention the edict of Henry I, but he relates that in 1128 a certain knight who prided himself on the luxuriance of his tresses, having dreamed that he was strangled by them, cut them off immediately on waking.

This example, he adds, spread throughout England, and almost all military men allowed their hair to be cropped a proper length. But, alas, this decency did not continue long, for scarcely a year expired ere all who thought themselves courtly lapsed into their former folly, and those who had no natural curls put on false ones.—London Standard.

William Cook, 32 years old, who has been working in Burke Falls for some months, purchased eight ounces of wood alcohol and drank it in a restaurant, expiring the following day. His relatives reside in the United States.

Johnston.—In Ops, on Nov. 6th, Mary Anne Johnston, wife of Andrew Johnston, aged 79 years. FREE.—On October 31st, at Mount Pleasant, Arthur, eldest son of Joseph and Annie Fee, in his 23rd year.
