Aldermen justify the silence of council on the electric light question, on the ground that the resolution passed at the citizens' meeting, instructed the committee to arrange. some details, without which the acceptance of the company's offer of $45 per lamp, was not recommended. There is some technical force in that position; but the time for hair-splitting has passed. The council knows now the lowest price at which light can be bought from the company, and it also knows the probable cost at which it can be produced by the town. These are the essentials.

The people know these things too, and realize that they are the essentials. Public opioion is out-running the committee and takes little interest in what they are doing.
