But fate in the dual guise of Horrigan and Wainwright intervened. The financier and the boss, seeking some quiet spot for a chat, strolled through the foyer, where Horrigan on sight of Bennett halted with a glower of dislike, which he took no pains to con-

CHAPTER IX. THE moment of strained silence that ensued upon Horrigan's entrance was broken by the irrepressible Perry, who, having rescued Cynthia from Gibbs at the close of their dance, was escorting her triumphantly from the ballroom. "This is my dance," he remarked happily to Alwyn as he came up, "and we're going to sit it out. If Mrs. Bennett in her capacity of chaperon should ask for Cynthia, you can tell her we're going into the glass house to stroll among the romantic vegetables."

And he departed with his prize in the direction of the conservatory. The moment's interruption had sufficed for Wainwright to whisper an admonitory word in Horrigan's ear. Dallas, too. fearing a clash, took Bennett's arm. "It's so warm in here!" she murmur-

"You're in luck!" sneered Horrigan. "That makes two people you say you can trust-first your secretary, Thompson, and then- Hello!" he broke off as a swarthy middle aged man hurried in. "Looking for me, Williams? What's The newcomer was visibly excited, and at first glance Horrigan had seen that something was amiss. "What's up?" repeated the boss. "Ellis has gone-deserted!" cried Wil-

"Ellis!" echoed Wainwright in dismay, for the man of whom Williams spoke was one of the aldermanic "solid thirteen" on whom Horrigan counted. The boss made no comment, but waited impatiently for his benchman to

"Ellis has gone," repeated Williams. "He left a note for me saying his wife is very ill and the doctor's ordered him to take her south. So he can't attend

Friday's meeting." "Can't attend the meeting?" gasped Wainwright. "But everything depends

"Oh, he'll be on hand, the cur!" growled Horrigan. "The rest are standing solid of course?" "I think so," hazarded Williams, "but some of 'em are pretty scared. We've never had such a fight before as Bennett's putting up against us now,

"I'll strengthen 'em up so as to knock out any weakening!" declared Horrigan confidently. "It's Ellis we've got to look after now. Go after him, Williams, on the first train south and haul him back. Have him here by Friday if you have to kidnap him. I'll stand for any damage or expense. Only see he's here for that meeting. It's up to you. Now jump!" As Williams hastened toward the door Horrigan called after him:

"On your way out send word to Roberts that I want to see him here. Well, Wainwright," he resumed, turning back into the room, "it looks bad." "Do you think"-"I think we're in a tight place. It

Gibbs, in search of an elusive partner, crossed the foyer and paused to greet them. "What news?" he asked.

Wainwright surveyed the broker's well groomed figure with less approval than usual.

"You seem to be industrious enough tonight," said he. "It's a pity some of tonight's dancing energy couldn't have been devoted to your work this morn-Gibbs flushed at the reproof in words

"I don't understand," he replied

"Why didn't you notify me of the hig block of Borough stock that war bought up just before noon?" "I hadn't heard about it," answered

Gibbs, with not quite all his customary assurance. "Everybody else heard of it. You'll have to keep better tabs on the market than that if you're to be any use to us.

Do you know who bought it?" "No," returned Gibbs, with growing uneasiness. "Of course I don't. How should I know? What are you driving at?"

"This is what I'm driving at: Several big blocks of the stock have been unloaded on the market during the past few days and have been quietly snapped up. Somebody's evidently tailing on to our game. You don't know who?" "I've told you twice that I didn't know," blustered Gibbs, masking his concern under a show of virtuous in-young broker's nerve, for a certain shrewd scheme of his showed signs of falling through. By his original arrangement with Wainwright he was to have manipulated all the Borough stock purchases on the exchange floor and to receive 20 per cent of the profits on the condition that Le invest not one dollar in the stock on his private ac-

Having strong faith in the deal's success and having no equally strong incentive to keep faith with his partners, Gibbs had sought to swell his own profits by secretly buying up quantities of the stock for himself until every penny of his capital was involved. His troubled mind could not now determine whether or not Wainwright suspected him. Gibbs, while possessing all the ambition, selfishness and lack of conscience that go toward the making of a great financier, lacked the one chief essentials for the part-namely,
