On Henry George. Behold! he is not dead, For heroes never die ; His soul has only fled To broader spheres on high, His spirit still remains Within the hearts of men; It bids them burst their chain And so be free again.

And is his work then done Because his voice is still? Ah, no, 'tis just begun For, lo, it is his will That we, who loved him so, Be brave and strong as he, Till tyranny lies low And right claims victory!

Then rise, oh! true heart, rise; Ye mourning ones be glad; Tis yours to win the prize Your leader should have have: To teach us, while you can, Like him beneath the sod, The "brotherhood of man," The "Fatherhood of God!" Be strong, be pure, be true,

Be patient in defeat, And know, what'er you do, He never said "retreat!" His soul shall lead us on Till every ill be past, Till victory be won And rest be ours at last. -Alice Garland
