Some boards being needed by the workmen at the top of the building, Mr. Blain hitched the holsting rope about three twelve feet inch boards and pulled away. When they had been elevated some 90 feet (the building is over 100 feet in height) and just as the man at the top reached out to grasp them, the knot gave way and the boards shot down the narrow shaft at lightning speed. When about ten feet from the bottom they came in contact with a heavy cross-beam, and glancing the end of one of them struck Mr. Blain on the side of the head almost entirely severing a large piece of scalp. The end of another board caught him on the shoulder, inflicting an ugly bruise. Mr Blaine was knocked down but was not rendered insensible. Fortunately 'Dr. not rendered insensible.
