THE CRUISE OF WATER-WITCH.

A Story of Thrilling Adventure on Land and Son.

ment and discussed. There might be a trick in it, but we had more confidence in earselves than before, so it was decided to ran the craft into the bay. The cabin doors were opened, and every man stepped out on deck, perpared for what might happen. Then the captain said to Johnmaking sail and wearing the bark around until her nose pointed at the opening in a promise of marriage. That's exactly the reef. The island loomed up right | what I wanted to do-to tell Mary that I before us, and had there been a delay of | thought she was the dearest, nicest girl in 15 minutes we should have been on the all this world, and ask her to make me reef. The mutineers obeyed all orders the proudest, happlest man by giving me found an insurgent camp, from which they with alacrity, and such of them as came her hand in marriage. She could read were fired upon. The soldiers returned the aft of the tarricade were respectful in | my mind, the witch, and she kept me on look and demeanor. The opening in the the ragged edge for an hour or so before reef was not more than 40 feet wide, and had we not been directly opposite it we should never have got in. As it was, we had to go it blind, as the saying is, no one knowing what depth of water we should find. What seemed to be a river, but what was really a long and narrow bay, ran into the center of the island for a distance of half a mile.

There were two turns or elbows in the bay, but once over the reef the bark glided along until she was brought up in 30 feet of water near the head of the bay. On the west of us was a steep bank and deep water. On the east was a clear strip of beach, with the water gradually deepening. When the anchor was down the bark would swing to the tide safely enough, but with no more than 50 feet to spare. In other words, the distance between the shore and her stern was only a biscuit toss. When the anchor was down and everything aloft made snug, Johnson mounted the barricade and said:

"Captala, we are going ashore. We gave you the best fight we could, but were beaten. If you want to take the bark out, none of us will raise a hand in opposition. If you want to come ashore no one shall molest you. In the end a man-of-war will come for us, but meanwhile we shall enjoy ourselves."

"And what do you want in return for that fine speech?" asked the captain, feeling assured that it prefaced a request of some kind.

"Well, by your kind leave, we want a share of the provisions, as we will get | an hour, and the ship was as quiet as a tired of fruit after awhile. We also want two or three old sails for tents, an axe or two, matches and some cooking utensils. We'll have to have a boat to set the things and our wounded men ashore, but we'll return her."

The captain was so glad to have them out of the ship, even if they were to remain in sight on land, that he readily our vigilance relaxed. A dozen strokes line and Simeon Calagoire, who live granted the request. Four of them were permitted to lower one of the boats, and for the next three hours she was used to convey the rascals and their dunnage amoss the strip of water. They were allowed to help themselves with liberal hand, but it was stuff which was of no account to us without our prisoners. It was after 3 o'clock in the afte moon before the last man departed, and then be the octopus. By and by the sharks the boat was given a push from the shore remained stationary, as if on guard. I and sent back to us. A nong the gang said the four people were watching and were eight wounded men, their injuries | listening, and yet but for those sharks a having been inflicted when the women fired through the loopholes. Three of them had met an awful passengers were for having the captain | them. On the contrary, we earnestly trip anchor and sail at once, but he gathered them around him and said:

one of you men can go aloft or take a trick at the wheel. I don't say that we might not navigate the bark down to Adelaide; but with the season just changing and bad weather coming on, we'd be taking strong risks. The Englishman who spoke us thoroughly understood our peril, and can be depended on to report us. If we hang right here for a fortnight, we'll see a man-of-war in the offing. can't recapture the convicts, but we can remain here as a guard and help hunt them down later on. Besides, if we were to sail away, who can tell but that some craft may be driven here by stress of weather or come in answer to a signal and she'd certainly fall into the hands o the gang? We have a clear ship now and can afford to wait."

The women murmured a bit, but the men cheerfully acquiesced in the conclusion, and when things were once more shipshape aboard no one would have suspected what we had passed through. Not one of the mutineers had spoken a word to us or given anybody a black look during the transfer, and as fast as they landed on the beach they disappeared in the thick forest, presumably to look for a site on which to make a camp. The passengers thought we had done with them for good, but the rest of us had a different feeling. As night was coming on Catpain Clark came to me and said: "Ralph, I don't like the way Johnson talked, nor I don't like the soft, silky way the mutineers acted as they went ashore.

not to have some trick back of it. What "Well, sir, I agree with you as to there being some trick in it. Those men haven't given up the fight yet. You don't hear them shouting and laughing ashore, and if one of us was to creep through the woods I'm thinking he'd find them gathered about Johnson and new plans being discussed. Rest assured, sir, they'll make some move to get possession of the bark, and it won't be long delayed

"Just my idea, and we must make ready for them."

The cabin was left just as we had defended it, but we battened down the hatches and scuttles so that there was no getting below. When we came to inspect the convicts' cages, we found nothing of them left. They had been torn away and the material flung overboard. Had we succeeded in putting down the mutiny we visions as they could get at, and as we ment; she at once began to improve. The not fired or scuttled the ship in their rapidly, and now is quite well.

When night came down, a double watch was set on beard. Haskell and Miss Foster took the bow, and Mary and I the stern, and the men who lay down in the cabin had their weapons ready for a sudden call. It was a quiet, starlight night, and the beach was so near that bad any of the mutineers appeared we should have made them out.

From 8 o'clock until midnight I was alone with Mary for the first time since I knew her name. There was no doubt of my love for her, and she had done a good as told me that she returned it, and yet I must tell you that I was more upset for the first hour than when the mutineers | Twenty-four hours after Patnam's is rushed at us. As to how people make love on land I have no knowledge, but I'm telling you in my plain, sailorlike way how we made love on shipboard in that bit of a bay, with mayhap half a hundred desperate villains hidden in the bushes not a stone's throw away. There was no vowing that I was ready to die for her, and she didn't declare that I was the bravest and noblest man on earth. I knew I loved her with a'l my heart, and had she not loved me she would not have placed her future in my keeping. If the mutineers had a plan for that night it would soon unfold itself. The idea was to creep down through the bushes to the edge of the water and quietly swim out to us, hoping to find | day with Julius Naelene, Salvator Cawould bring a swimmer alongside.

There were four persons in the second watch, as there had been in the first, and while they kept eyes and ears open they suddenly discovered three monster sharks moving lazlly around the vessel. They were of the species known as the hammer head, and there is no fiercer nor more disgusting inhabitant of the sea, unless it terrible calamity might have happened. the water to board the craft over her bows, and whatever noise they might have made was drowned in the grating of her chain cable in the iron hawse hole as she swung to the tide. But none of them reached her. The first one had not laid hands on her chains when one of the sharks seized him, and a second later the other two had selected victims. There were three fearful shrieks, a chorus of shouts and a great splashing, and all was over before any one in the cabin could get on deck. The surviving mutineers

CHAPTER XV.

A DEATH ON BOARD. At an early hour next morning after the tragedy just recorded, a number of the mutineers appeared on the beach, where their provisions still lay, and began to carry off various articles. Our hope that Johnson might have been one of the trio seized by the sharks was soon dissiparted, as he was the fourth or fifth man to appear. Without so much as a look at the ship he began shouting orders, and for an hour was constantly in sight. At the end of that time everything had been carried into the bushes. When ready to go Johnson turned to face us, drew himself up, and fastening his gaze on Captain Cark, he said:

"Captain, I was playing you soft yesterday when I told you that we would be content with the provisions. We want the bark, and we'll keep trying for her as long as there's a man left alive. You've shown us no mercy and need expect none from us."

"Well, what's your point?" "It's just this: Give us the bark, and we'll go away in her and leave you in comfortable shape on the island. Refuse us, and we'll find a way to destroy ship and all of you, even if we perish at the same time. It shouldn't rest with you and your bloody mates to say 'no' to this, for the men with wives and children ought to have a word. Havana, Dec. 26 .- News from Mantus, in the Province of Pinar del Rio, gives the details of an encounter on Dec. 20 between Lieut. Liamio, commanding a body of local guerillas and volunteers. The Spanish force, arriving at a place called Danche, leaving 23 dead on the field. The arms and effects of the insurgents were captured and their camp destroyed. Eight of the dead rebels were identified, but who the others killed were is unknown to the people residing in the locality. The Government forces sustained no loss.

This information comes from a Spanish source, and it is added that by the defeat of this band of rebels the zone in which they were found is entirely clear of insurgents It is learned from other sources that the affair was similar to others, and that the dead rebels were simply pacificos, who had no means of defending themselves against the Government troops.

Last night bands of rebels fired on the towns of Santiago de Los Vegas, Rancho Boyerer and Calabasar, all in the Province of Havana. The attacks caused great excitement among the inhabitants, who feared that the insurgents were able to raid the towns and give them to the flames. After aring a few shots, which were productive of no results beyond scaring the people, the rebels withdrew. The latest report concerning the move-ments of General Weyler, who was encamped near San Cristobal, is that he marched to-day. No information is given regarding his objective point. He has had no encounter with the enemy since his return to the Province of Pinar del Rio from Havana, notwithstanding his elaborate plan of campaign, which necessitates the use of 30,000 troops.

STOPPING WITH HER GIPSY LOVER

But the Princess Appears to be Infaimpled, and is only Awaiting a Divorce From Mer Susband to Marry Mim.

New York, Dec. 27 .- A special from Losdon to The World says: The Princess De Caraman-Chimay, the former Detroit girl, is actually, with her coarse and vulgar gypay lever, at his home in a remote village in Hungary. Vienna despatches of resterday and to-day assert, definally satissed with him and her position. The statement seems absurdly extravagant, but it is in entire conformity with nor course in Paris before she eloped.

The World representative in Paris has obtained the exact history of the events which preceded her flight. The necessity for excluding the public from her husband's suit for divorce, now in progress at Charieroi, Belgium, seems useless to the many in Paris and Belgium who are fully acquainted with the details of the young weman's extraordinary actions in Paris.

The Prince de Caraman-Chimay is of French origin. Several of his ancestors performed apjendid service in the French Miss Clara Ward, as is now well known. the daughter of a very wealthy Toronto woman. They met first at Nice and were married in Paris, the American and Brit-ish Ambassadors being present, among many other distinguished people. There was a magnificent marriage settlement up-on the Prince. Two children were born. Janes Rigo, the gypsy, was born at Paks, in the district of Samogy, Hungary. He is anything but an Adonia, being a tall, skinny, awkward animal of about 35, with straight black hair, which seems pasted on his head, and is scrupulously parted in the middle. He is pitted with small-pox.

Rigo has a wife. Their two children died. He went to Paris are years ago and joined a gypsy band of musicians. His fiddling attracted the attention of the benevotent Russian Prince Jablonowsky, who advanced to him money to start a hand of vanced to him money to start a band of Chimay, who had already fearfully risked her reputation in other affairs, happened in the restaurant where he was playing last winter, and convers-ed with him. In a day or two there was no secret about their intimacy and not the slightest attempt at concealment on the Rigo's wife was the first to object. Her husband not coming home at the usual hour used her suspicion, and she began watch him at the restaurant. Violent scenes resulted, and to end them Rigo made this proposal to her: Go back to Hungary with your father, your mother and your brother and live at Paks with my parents. I will pay the fares and send you a thousand francs a month. Then, when I have made a fortune through the gifts of the Princess, I will rejoin you and we will live quietly on our income. Mrs. Rigo was easily persuaded, and returned to her native country, but no thou-sand francs a month were forthcoming, so she returned to Paris, accompanied by her busband's mother, and even introduced her to the Princess, who invited her to luncheon, but with his wife he would have no-thing to do. A fortnight later the poor woman left Paris, broken-hearted. Up to this time the gypsy had worn a blue Swiss Admiral's uniform every night, and the Princess was his most faithful listener. She used to pass the evening and half the night at the restaurant, and when the concert was over used to take him way in her carriage. The scandal became so crying that the proprietor of the restaurant gave Rigo the hoice of leaving the woman or losing his place. The gypsy, without hesitation, threw up his engagement. At the same time the Princess left her husband. All this happened at the beginning of the summer. The pair went to the seaside and afterwards traveled. They were in Paris in August at a hotel on the Boulevard des Capucines, where one day Rigo gave a banquet to his former colleggues. banquet to his former colleagues.

"Are you happy, madam?" asked one of the guests of the host's. "Not wholly," was the answer, "because my husband is not yet trying to get a di-vorce, although I have done everything I could to make him do so." "And your children?" "I love them very much, but I love Rigo better, and my only wish is to be able to marry him as soon as possible." A package addressed to her arrived at the hotel. She refused to receive it, say-ing: "I am no longer a princess. My name is Mme. Rigo." The gypsy's wife reappeared on the scene at about this time, and as she applied to the police, Rigo became afraid and disappeared with the Princess. They are now in Hungary, tranquilly awaiting the decision of the Charleroi tribunal. Rigo is said to be negotiating with his wife to get her also to sue for a divorce. Young Ward, the Princess' brother, abandoned his wife and children about two years ago to elope from Dinard with the maid of Lady Eden, a famous English The press despatches have already informed the world that two persons known to be the Princess and her lover arrived in Huhlweissenberg, Hungary, Rigo's home, on Tuesday. They went together that night to the opera, where the Princess wore splendid diamonds. In answer to enquiries by the chief of police. CHRISTMAS IN A HUT. London, Dec. 27 .- The Standard's Vlenna correspondent telegraphs that the Princess of Caraman-Chimay, formerly Miss Clara Ward of Detroit, Mich., who eloped with Janos Rigo, a Hungarian gypsy mu-sician, spent Christmas evening at the hut of Rigo's parents at Stuhlweissenberg, Hungary. The Princess has purchased a house and several acres of land, which she has given to her paramour's parents. On Christmas Day a number of gypsy bands serenaded Rigo and the Princess. BIG BAILWAY DEAL Central Verment, St. Lawrence & Adtrondack and Delaware & Mudson Go Into a Pool.

Montreal, Dec. 27 .- (Special.)-One of the most important arrangements ever entered into by railway corporations in this country will be consummated on the first of the New Year. The Central Vermont, the St. Lawrence and Adirondack (which is the New York Central), and the Delaware and Hudson have agreed to pool receipts and equally divide between the three companies. The object is to save expenses on New York traffic.

The proposal of the Grand Trunk to rebuild the Victoria bridge has caused a good deal of speculation here as to the sum required for the completion of the work. It is understood that the Grand Trunk will ask the Dominion Parliament for $150,000 and a like amount from the Quebec Legislature, while the cost of the work is estimated at $1,500,000.

Over five hundred tickets have been disposed of for the Laurier banquet at the Windsor Hotel. It is said that the Premier's address will dwell chiefly on the tariff and the Manitoba school settlement, and it is likewise held that Hon, Mr. Greenway will say son ething of importance. It is stated that the Manitoba Premier will tell his hearers that he will faithfully carry out the arrangement entered into between the Dominion and local Governments, but that he is ready to take a Homan Catholic into his Cabinet to show his good will towards the minority in that Province.

The opening of the shipping season of 1898 will be marked by the arrival in Montreal of a 10,000-ton freight boat. This magnificent vessel will form one of the Allan fleet of steamers, and it is not improbable that it is but one of several others. The new vessel will be 470 feet long, 52 feet beam, with a depth of 37 feet. Her engines will be of 3000 horse-power, giving her a speed of 121-2 knots, and the steamer will be completed in December, 1897. Grills, will recover; Will Booker, jaw braken, eye blown out and badly burned; Frank Turbee, seriously burned; Thomas Price, single, severely burned.

The men, after a lay-off one day for Christman, went down in the mine to emist in cleaning up the debris of a small explosion of fire damp. It is but a short three since odd was discovered here. It is believed that the mine was not sufficiently guarded. The injured are in such condition that they are receiving all possible attention, and nearly all will recover rapidly. Immediately after the explosion all the men were summoned to the shaft, but all efforts at rescue were balked by the fire-damp. The men were put to work as quickly as possible drawing the gas from under the ground. The force of the explosion was terrible, and some of the bodies are in an awful condition. In two other cases limbs were blown of and found mangled in other ways. The dead brought to the surface were taken to the undertakers or morgue. It will probably be 24 hours bemorgue. It will probably be 24 hours before any attempt at rescue can be made, and there is held out for them but little hope.

JAMES KEITH, WILLIAM-ST.

The Post.

Mrs. Rebecca F. Gardner, of Grafton, York Co. Va., writes: "When I was married I weighed 125 pounds. I was taken sick and reduced in health and broke out with a disease which my doctor said was eexema. He treated my disease but failed to do me any good, and I fell away to 90 pounds. I began using Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery, and thank God and you, I began to improve. Now I weigh 140 pounds and have only taken two bottles. I cannot say too much about the medicine. My husband says I look younger than I did the first time he saw me, 15 years ago."
