A STRONG FRAGMENT OF LATIN.

"Excruciating" is a long, strong work. It comes from the Latin crux, a cross. We get "crucify" from the same root When any one talks of "exeruciating Sae McGillivray, was well rendered, as Dr. Potter, of Peterbore, in the Presbytepain," we understand him to mean the was also a recitation by our well-known rian church, entitled "How to eat sawdust greatest agony it is possible to endure.

of spasms, which caused me excruciating pain," writes a lady in Stony Stratford, near Wolverton, Bucks. Was this language too strong? Let us see.

"All my life I have suffered more or less from indigestion, but got along fairly well up to October, 1889. At this time my appetite was poor, and after meals I had great weight and fulness at the chest. However light the food I took, intense pain followed, and I was in agony until my stemach rejected It. Almost every day I had severe attacks of spasms, which caused me excruciating pair. 'In this state I continued month after month, my food not doing me the slightest good. I lost flesh rapidly and went as thin as a skeleton. My friends never exsected to see me getting any batter. "For over six months I continued in this distressing state, during which time I took medicines which relieved me for the time, but I gradually got weaker and

"At last I was recommended by Mr.

Pattison, of Stony Stratford, to try a medicine called Mother Seigel's Curative Syrup. I got a bottle from Mr. F. Moore, grecer, Wolverton, and after taking half of it I felt relief; and soon the spasms and pain left me, and I got as strong as ever, and have since had no return of my old allment. If ever I need medicine few doses of Mother Seiger's Curative Syrup set me right. You can make what use you like of this statement. (Signed) (Mrs.) Eilen Hooton, Stony Stratford, near Wolver:on, Bucks, December 13:b, 1893." Is there any doubt that the occasion warranted Mrs. Hooton in using strong words? We receive letters in which the agony of indigestion and dyspepsia is compared with the gnawing teeth of wild beasts, which are not more pitiless than one of the traces one of the h rses let fly this disease. It must be fought with a remedy strong enough to free the body from the rotting mass of undigested food which sends poison into the blood, and gentle enough to act without distressing the weakest constitutions. An Advertising Sermon.

Mr. J. West Goodwin, editor of the Sedalla, Mc., Bazoo, recently delivered a encouraging word from the leader made sands everywhere. They are fashionable lecture on advertising for the benefit of a "hope spring exultant on triumphant and becoming colors for young or old, and local society. Sermon would be a better word than lecture, as Mr. Goodwin took for his text a verse from the bible, showing how Boaz directed Naomi to sell a parcel of land by advertising it. He maintained that all advertising ought to be like scripture—a setting forth of the truth.

"A great many men make mistakes in advertising," said he, "by not using the proper channels. Too little advertising is like sowing too little seed. It is the constart advertising that is bound to attract attention. It is the success of the bright, catchy advertisements that refuse to be ignored. That time must be allowed for the fruit to grow, ripen and be gathered, is as true as that wheat cannot be reaped the day after it is sowed."
