revolver on 'em." "Promise."

"I can't."

"For moi sake, Rats." The faintest trace of a smile, despite her desperate situation, passed over her face as she imitated the corporal's pronunciation. The quaint humor, mingled with so many singular traits prominent in her that could show itself at so critical a moment, touched a responsive Irish chord in his Irish heart and brought him to terms.

"For your sake, darlin, Oi'll do it," he said, in a despairing voice.

There was scarcely time for him to speak the words-indeed they were whispered with his lips touching her ear-when the three cavalry men rode up to where the two were.

"What's it all about, corporal?" asked one of them.

"I found this-this lady-lying here. Her buggy is broken. She is badly hurt." The corporal spcke the words haltingly, and drops of sweat stood out on his fo ehead. "Who is she?"

"Well, that's to be found out some other time. One of ye'd better ride back for an ambulance and a surgeon, "Never mind the surgeon," said Miss Baggs faintly.

"Well, bring the ambulance any way," said Ratigan. "Ye can go back if ye like. Oi'll stay with her. She's me own prisoner."

"There's no need of all going," said the man who had spoken. 'I'll go myself."
