

Ayer's Remedies

"For Years,"

Says CARIE E. STOCKWELL of Chesterfield, N. H., "I was afflicted with an extremely severe pain in the lower part of the chest. The feeling was as if a ton of weight was laid on a spot the size of my hand. During the attacks, the perspiration would stand in drops on my face, and it was agony for me to make sufficient effort to whisper. They came suddenly, at any hour of the day or night, lasting from thirty minutes to half a day, leaving as suddenly; but, after several days after, I was quite prostrated and sore. Sometimes the attacks were almost daily, then less frequent. After about four years of this suffering, I was taken down with bilious typhoid fever, and when I began to recover, I had the worst attack of my old trouble I ever experienced. At the first of the fever, my mother gave me Ayer's Pills, my doctor recommending them as being better than anything he could prepare. I continued taking these Pills, and so great was the benefit derived that during nearly thirty years I have had but one attack of my former trouble, which yielded readily to the same remedy."

LINDSAY, FRIDAY, MARCH 16, 1894.

A MEXICAN BELLE.

"Having first glanced at his sister with inquiring severity; but this time there was innocence written on Gabrielle's face who was trying up the last knot of the doctor's parcel.

"Is that another of those April letters, whatever you call them?" inquired the baron, anxiously.

"Well, I don't know; it looks remarkably like it," said his son, having perused the note. "Don't exactly know what to make of it. There is no necessity for immediate action, at any rate. I shall be back at six, and we can hold a convalesce here. Here, father," and he tossed the paper across to the baron, took up his riding-whip, left the room, mounted his horse, and trotted down the avenue, leaving Baron Valer and Gabrielle to make of the letter the best they could."

"TRIESTE, March 31st.

"I have come by Trieste, after all; the steamers suited better than the Hamburg ones. The passage was horribly bad—equinoctial gales, I was told. I am a little tired, and shall stay here till I am rested—perhaps some days. As soon as I am rested I shall come. I don't know whether you expected me by this mail, but I hope I am not coming too soon. Do not think me forward; it is the only thing I could do. There are circumstances necessitating my leaving Mexico which I hope to be able to explain to you later."

"REATA.

"Well," said Arnold, "that evening on his return from N., "what do you make of the letter? and have you come to any conclusions about it?"

"The old baron had come to no conclusions at all, except that the letter was probably an April fool."

"My first impression too. Let me have another look at it, and I will give you my verdict."

"Genuine," he pronounced—"quite genuine," after having submitted the post-mark and stamp to a critical examination.

"I can't feel quite sure," said his father, shaking his head still incredulously; "an atmosphere of April fools has gone far towards destroying the old baron's confidence in my disposition."

"No doubt about it; it is genuine," repeated Arnold; and the baron, who was accustomed to believe implicitly in what his son said, was soon brought to believe also that it was genuine.

"But then, you really mean to say that my poor cousin Olivia's companion is in Europe?"

"Well, you see she says so," answered Arnold, drily.

"But then she has not waited to hear from us, apparently."

"Apparently not."

"What can make her in such a hurry?"

"My dear father, I am perfectly unable to form a conjecture; she talks about circumstances, and hold out hopes of explaining them some day."

"Well, but what is to be done, Arnold?"

"Have the bed in the spare room made, and buy an extra cup, saucer and plate. We have not got enough in the house."

"But there are quite enough cups in the house," put in Gabrielle.

"I do wish you would not treat the matter so trivially, Arnold," said Baron Wilther, plaintively. "Remember what I owe to my cousin Olivia. After all she was to me once, I could not bear to treat anybody who ever had anything to do with her in any way with—"

"With slight nuance, of course not, father; but what else can you suggest?"

"Suggest? oh, I don't mean to suggest; but how is she to get here?"

"Of course we will send the dog-cart for her—that goes for granted; I never meant her to walk from the station."

"Yes, that is all very well; but how is she to get from Trieste to N.—? Surely some of us ought to go and fetch her?"

"Some of us fetch her, father! How very unnecessary! If she had been able to get from Mexico to Trieste without assistance, she can surely find her way from Trieste to Stambul."

"Ah, yes, Arnold; but do not speak so fast. Remember that all I owe to the memory of my cousin Olivia. The poor thing may be old and in bad health—"

"Yes, but she may be young and in excellent health," interrupted Arnold. "You know we have not cleared up that point yet."

"And it may be heartless of us," continued the old baron, without hearing his son's remark, "to expose her to the disagreeables of travelling alone. I really think, Arnold, considering all that I owe to my cousin, that one of us ought to go and fetch her." And having given forth his independent opinion, the baron leaned further in his arm-chair.

Mr. Gladstone and the Lords.

A London despatch of Feb. 23rd says:—"When Mr. Gladstone entered the house of commons at 3.30 o'clock this afternoon he was greeted with a storm of cheers, which lasted several minutes. He walked directly to his usual seat, and held a whispered consultation with Mr. John Morley, chief secretary for Ireland, and Sir William Harcourt, chancellor of the exchequer, who sat on either side of him. Lord Rosebery, who is looked upon as the coming premier, occupied a seat in the press gallery. The speaker put the question that the amendments of the house of lords to the local government bill be considered, when Mr. Gladstone arose and addressed the house in what in many respects was the most remarkable speech he has delivered for many years. He showed no signs of wanting power, except for an occasional slight huskiness in his otherwise resonant voice. Mr. Gladstone began by saying that the government had reached the conclusion that the time for passing bills back and forth from one house to the other had ended, and had decided upon a definite course. "To continue the process would be loss of dignity to both houses, and the government had decided to stop the operation, and take a decided course. The government had the choice of rejecting the house of lords' amendments and abandoning the hope of passing the bill or of accepting them under protest with the hope of soon reversing them. The government adopted the second course. The action of the house of lords regarding the bill of this session has raised a question of the gravest character. Two of these bills—the home rule bill and the employers' liability bill—occupied the attention of the house of commons for 100 days. They involved vast labours. Members of the house of commons have worked through this session almost double the length of time of any session on record, and with an unequalled amount of intensity. This labor was for the purpose of enacting beneficial legislation. The house of lords, without giving it much consideration, wrecked that legislation." Mr. Gladstone said he remembered a book published in 1880, called "Fifty Years of the House of Lords." The contents of the book left upon the mind of every liberal a painful but firm conviction that the action of the house of lords during those fifty years had been grievously unsatisfactory. After further reviewing the action of the lords in the past on various vital questions, Mr. Gladstone said: "We have now come to a more acute stage. The question now is whether the judgment of the house of lords is not only to modify, but to annihilate, the whole work of the house of commons. The government has not been anxious to precipitate or unduly accentuate a crisis. It has been anxious rather to save something from the wreck. We are therefore compelled to accompany our acceptance of the amendments of the house of lords to the present bill with the declaration that the differences between the two houses cannot continue. Without using any hard words, or without presuming to judge motives, we feel it our duty to state the indisputable facts that the issue is raised by a deliberative assembly, elected by the votes of several million men, and a different kind of an assembly, though it was occupied by some men of virtue and talent. That controversy once raised must go forward to its issue." Mr. Gladstone said he was rejoiced that this issue had been postponed in many cases partly owing to discretion, circumspection, and reserve in the case of the enormous privileges which the house of lords had on various occasions showed, he was afraid that the epoch of that reserve, discretion, and circumspection had ended. Otherwise the members of the opposition must feel that in some way or other the solution had been found for the tremendous contrariety and incessant conflict on matters of high principle and profound importance. Between the representatives of the people and those filling the non-elective chamber he admitted that the house of commons could not take it upon itself to pass judgment on the matter, or to be the final judge of its own case. There was a higher authority than the house of commons. There was the authority of the nation—(cheers and counter cheers)—which must in the last resort decide the crisis at once. The government would regard the decision as absolutely final. The time had come, Mr. Gladstone continued, to invite this decision of the people. The circumstances under which the decision would be invited constituted a question of the gravest character. His own duty for the present terminated with calling attention to the fact that in considering the amendments of the house of lords, the house of commons dealt with an inseparable part of the question. The amending of the parish councils bill, viewed in this light, had become a profoundly acute issue, which would demand and receive settlement at an early date from the highest authority. If the government should ask the house to accept the mutilated bill, the advice would be given under a grave sense of responsibility. The government were properly unwilling to do unnecessarily anything which would stimulate the sharpness of the present crisis. They hesitated, therefore, to consign to destruction the only portion remaining from the arduous work of the expiring session. (Loud liberal and radical cheers.)

Newspapers and Magazines.

Recent issues of Harper's have been notably strong in short stories. The March number issued this week, will contain five: "The Buckley Lady," a love-story of colonial New England, by Miss Mary E. Whitman; "A Paris Career," a history of a gaudy career in the Mediterranean, by W. E. Norris; "An Undivided Tragedy," a romantic tale of English country life, by Miss Laurence Alma Taddema, daughter of the well-known painter at a Private View; a sketch of New York life, by Brander Matthews; and "Cacho, Cacho," a story of the French Revolution, by William McClelland.

—"An Ecstacy of Virtue" by Champion Russell, is the striking title of a novel contained in the March number of "Tales from Town Topics." A rather startling exposition of the mysterious power of love is made in this story. We find a beautiful young widow of great fortune rejecting to some extent the devotion of an ardent young lover. She philosophizes over the wisdom of marrying him, although she loves him devotedly, and thence a sudden she literally kidnaps him by drugging his food and carrying him away along with her on a yacht. Their life together is ideal; but fatal and it only requires the appearance of a wild little native of San Domingo to rob the widow of her cavalier. The reader is made to see the possible

SUGAR OF MILK.

THE BASIS OF LACTATED FOOD.

No Other Food so Pure in Composition.

Authorities on infant feeding and dietetics now acknowledge the necessity of sugar of milk in infant foods, as it always morbid irritation and checks diarrhoea.

Prof. Kuss, in his "Physiology," says that sugar of milk is "the principal element in woman's milk."

The importance of sugar of milk as an element in artificial foods is now adequately recognized in the composition of Lactated Food. It forms the basis of this admirable food now so largely used for infants.

No other food in the world is so well adapted for the weak and delicate infant that cannot be breast-fed; Lactated Food. Mothers who use inferior foods are not doing their little ones justice; there is no infant preserver and nourisher that can compare with Lactated Food; the best physicians will confirm this statement.

A STRANGE EXPERIENCE.

AN INTERVIEW WITH A WELL KNOWN BRANT COUNTY LADY.

Suffered for Two Years With Sick Headache, Dizziness and Dyspepsia.—How She Found Relief—What Well-known Chemists Say.

From the Brantford Exporter.

Mrs. S. W. Avery lives on Pleasant Ridge, about four miles out of the city of Brantford, that being her nearest post-office and where all her trading is done. Mr. and Mrs. Avery have always lived in that neighborhood, and he is the owner of two splendid farms, the one where he lives consisting of 100 acres and the other lying near Brantford comprising 100 acres. They are highly respected residents of the community in which they reside, and every person for miles around knows them. Having heard that Mrs. Avery had been cured of chronic dyspepsia and indigestion, by the use of Dr. Williams' Pink Pills, a reporter called on her to make public the facts of her recovery. Mrs. Avery replied that she was willing to make public the facts of her recovery. Mrs. Avery replied that she was willing to give her experience for the benefit of those who might be similarly suffering. "For the past two years," said Mrs. Avery, "I had been greatly troubled with a very sick headache, dizziness, and a cough which I believe were the symptoms of dyspepsia and indigestion, and I could find nothing to relieve me, although I tried several different medicines. I could not even eat anything which would relieve my cough, which at times would be very severe. Early last winter I read in the Exporter of Dr. Williams' Pink Pills, and as the symptoms mentioned were somewhat similar to mine I was thus induced to try them. I procured a supply from Messrs. McGregor and Merrill, druggists of Brantford. Before I had used two boxes of the Pink Pills I felt so much better and relieved from my distressing symptoms that I thought it would be best to continue taking them through the winter, and I accordingly got another supply and used them, with the result that I have been totally relieved. I have not since had the severe headaches which formerly made my life miserable and my cough has entirely disappeared. I strongly recommend Pink Pills to anyone who suffers similar to what I did, from dizziness, headache, indigestion, etc., and I believe they will derive great benefit from their use.

Mrs. Avery's statement was corroborated by her husband, who was present during the interview, and who said that without a shadow of a doubt Pink Pills had accomplished more for his wife than any other medicine which she had taken.

Messrs. McGregor & Merrill were interviewed, and in reply to a query as to the sale of these pills, Mr. McGregor said: "We have sold in the neighborhood of 5,000 boxes during the twelve months and there is no remedy we handle gives better satisfaction to our customers than Dr. Williams' Pink Pills. I have every confidence that Pink Pills are the best on the market, and something the people can depend upon." Mr. Merrill, the other member of this well-known firm, said: "I have more pleasure in selling Pink Pills than any other medicine we handle, because it is rarely there is any disappointment in them, and the people who purchase them unanimously express themselves as well satisfied. I am well acquainted with Mrs. Avery and I know that all her statements are reliable, and I have watched the improvement Pink Pills have made in her case and have seen a great change for the better. Many other druggists recommending the pills, sometimes their own, to be equally as good as Pink Pills, but we cannot conscientiously say so, knowing that as a system tonic Dr. Williams' Pink Pills stand unrivalled."

Dr. Williams' Pink Pills are a perfect blood builder and nerve restorer, curing such diseases as rheumatism, neuralgia, partial paralysis, locomotor ataxia, St. Vitus' dance, nervous headache, nervous prostration, and the tired feeling therefrom, the after effects of a gripe, diseases depending on humors in the blood, such as scrofula, chronic erysipelas, etc. Pink Pills give a healthy glow to pale and sallow complexions, and are a specific for the troubles peculiar to the female system, and in the case of men they effect a radical cure in all cases arising from mental worry, overwork or excesses of any nature.

Dr. Williams' Pink Pills are sold only in boxes bearing the firm's trade mark and wrapper, (printed in red ink). Bear in mind that Dr. Williams' Pink Pills are never sold in bulk, or by the dozen or hundred, and any dealer who offers substitutes in this form is trying to defraud you. The public are also cautioned against other so-called blood purifiers and nerve tonics, put up in similar form and intended to deceive. They are imitations whose makers hope to reap a pecuniary advantage from the wonderful reputation achieved by Dr. Williams' Pink Pills.

Dr. Williams' Pink Pills may be had of all druggists, or direct by mail from Dr. Williams' Medicine Company, Brockville, Ont., or Schenectady, N. Y., at 50 cents a box, or six boxes for $2.50. The price at which these pills are sold makes a course of treatment comparatively inexpensive as compared with other courses of treatment.
