GREAT POLITICAL EXFERIMENT.

New Zealand Tries a Endical Plan Which is Said to Work Well, New Zealand has no customs duties and does not tax any buildings or personal property, except incomes above a certain large annual sum. The greater part of its revenue is raised by taxing land values. Referring to this, Mr. John Farrel, of the Sydney (New South Wales) Daily Telegraph, says:

"In New Zealand the progressive land value tax has had splendid results, in revenue producing, in cheapness of collecticn, and in causing lands to be opened for use on easier terms than formerly. "Quite a rush of emigration from the other colonies consequently set in, and settlement upon the land is proceeding very rapidly. The Government of New Zealand is now being "run" by the labor members, of whom there were a sufficient number returned at last election to hold the balance of power. They have used a great opportunity wisely and soberly for the general advancement; thanks largely to the educational influence on the popular mind of Sir George Grey's legislative efforts and public utterances.

"Lately a declaration from New Zealand trades unionists has been made to the effect that the problem of land settlement is the problem of labor, and that in their opinion the bulk of public revenue, if not all, should be derived from land values. That is the feeling not only of the most intelligent of the New Zealand working class, but of
