(Centinued from last week) him with a bewildered, questioning gaze, as one to whom alone of all men this unheard of and extraordinary thing had happened. Then rubbing his head he mounted slowly onto the box and drove away with an uptossed hand appealing to the universe. The lady smoothed down her dress, pushed back her hair under her little felt hat and strode in through the hall door, which was closed behind her. As with a whisk her short skirts vanished into the darkness the two spectators-Miss Bertha and Miss Monica Williams-sat looking at each other in speechless amazement. For 50 years they had peeped through that little window and across that trim garden, but never yet had such a sight as this come to con-

"I wish," said Monica at last, "that we had kept the field." "I am sure I wish we had," answered her sister.

CHAPTER II. BREAKING THE ICE.

The cottage from the window of which the Misses Williams had looked out stands, and has stood for many a year, in that pleasant suburban district which lies beween Norwood, Anerley and Forest Hill. Long before there had been a thought of a township there, when the metropolis was still quite a distant thing, old Mr. Williams had inhabited "The Brambles," as the little house was called, and had owned all the fields about it. Six or eight such cottages scattered over a rolling countryside were all the houses to be found there in the days when the century was young. From afar, when the breeze came from the north, the dull, low roar of the great city might be heard like the breaking of the tide of life, while along the horizon might be seen the dim curtain of smoke, the grim spray which that tide threw up.

Gradually, however, as the years passed, the city had thrown out a long brick feeler here and there, curving, extending and coalescing, until at last the little cottages had been gripped round by these red tentacles and had been absorbed to make room for the modern villa. Field by field the estate of old Mr. Williams had been sold to the speculative builder and had borne rich crops of snug suburban dwellings arranged in curving crescents and tree lined avenues. The father had passed away before his cottage was entirely bricked round, but his two daughters, to whom the property had descended, lived to see the last vestige of country taken from them.

For years they had clung to the one field which faced their windows, and it was only after much argument and many heartburnings that they had at last consented that it should share the fate of the others. A broad toad was driven through their quiet domain, the quarter was renamed "The Wilderness," and three square, staring, uncompromising villas began to sprout up on the other side. With sore hearts the two shy little old maids watched their steady progress and speculated as to what fashion of neighbors chance would bring into the little nook which had always been their own.

And at last they were all three finished. Wooden balconies and overhanging eaves had been added to them, so that, in the language of the advertisement, there were vacant three eligible Swiss built villas, with 16 rooms, no basement, electric bells, hot and cold water and every modern convenience, including a common tennis lawn, to be let at £100 a year or £1,500 purchase. So tempting an offer did not long remain open. Within a few weeks the card had vanished from No. 1, and it was known that Admiral Hay Denver, V. C., C. B., with Mrs. Hay Denver and their only son, was about to move into it. The news brought peace to the hearts of the Williams sisters. They had lived with a settled conviction that some wild, impossible colony, some shouting, singing family of madcaps, would break in upon their peace. This establishment at least was irreproacha-

A reference to "Men of the Time" was a most distinguished officer who had begun his active career at Bomarfund and had ended it at Alexandria, having managed between these two episodes to see as much service as any man of his years. From the Taku forts and the Shannon brigade to dhow harrying of Zanziber there was no variety of haval work which did not appear in his Albert medal for saving life vonched for it that in peace as in war his comrage was still of the same true temper. Clearly a very eligible neighbor this, the more to as they had been confidentially assured by the estate agent that Mr. Harold Denyer, the son, was a most quiet young gentleman, and that he was busy from morning to night on the Stock Exchange.

The Hay Denvers had hardly moved in before No. 2 also struck its placard, and again the ladies found that they had no reason to be discontented with their neighbors. Dr. Belthazar Walker was a very well known name in the medical world. Did not his qualifications, his memberships and the record of his writings fill a long half column in The Medical Directory from his first little paper on the "Gouty Diathesis" in 1859 to his exhaustive treatise upon "Affections of the Vaso-Motor System" in 1884? A successful medical career which promised to end in a presidentship of a college and a baronetcy had been cut short by his sudden inheritance of a considerable sum from a grateful patient, which had rendered him independent for life and had enabled him to turn his attention to the more scientific part of his profession, which had always had a greater charm for him than its more practical and commercial aspect. To this end he had given up his house in Weymouth street and had taken this onportunity of moving himself, his charming daughters (he had been a wi ower for some years) into the more beaceful atmosphere of Norwood. There was thus but one villa unoccu pied, and it was no wonder that the two maiden ladies watched with a keen interest, which deepened into a dire apprehension, the curious incidents which heralded the coming of the new tenants. They had already learned from the agent that the family consisted of two only, Mrs. Westmacott, a widow, and her nephew, Charles Westmacott. How simple and how select it had sounded! Who could have foreseen from it these maids cried in heartfelt chorus that they wished they had not sold their field.

lite to them as to the others."

"Most certainly," acquiesced her sister. "Since we have called upon Mrs. Hay must call upon this Mrs. Westmacott

"Certainly, dear. As long as they are living upon our land I feel as if they were in a sense our guests, and that it is our duty to welcome them."

Bertha, with decision. "Yes, dear, we shall. But, oh, I wish

At 4 o'clock on the next day the two maiden ladies set off upon their hospitaof black silk, with jet bespangled jackets and little rows of cylindrical gray curls drooping down on either side of their black bonnets, they looked like two old fashion plates which had wandered off into the wrong decade. Half curious and half fearful, they knocked at the door of No. 3, which was instantly opened by a redheaded page boy. Yes, Mrs. Westmacott was at home. He ushered them into the front room, furnished as a drawing room, where in spite of the fine spring weather a large fire was burning in the grate. The boy took their cards, and then, as they sat down together upon a settee, he set their nerves in a thrill by darting behind a curtain with a shrill cry and prodding at something with his foot. The bull pup which they had seen upon the day before bolted from his hiding place and scuttled snarling from the room. "It wants to get at Eliza," said the youth in a confidential whisper. "Master says she would give him more'n he brought." He smiled affably at the two little stiff black figures and departed in search of his mistress. "What-what did be say?" gasped

"Something about a- Oh, goodness gracious! Oh, Bertha! Oh, merciful heavens! Oh, help, help, help, help, help!" The two sisters had bounded on to the settee and stood there with staring eyes and skirts gathered in while they filled the whole house with their yells. Out of a high wickerwork basket which stood by the fire there had risen a flat, diamond shaped head with wicked green eyes, which came flickering upward, waving gently from side to side, until a foot or more of glossy, scaly neck was visible. Slowly the vicious head came floating up, while at every oscillation a fresh burst of shrieks came from the settee.

"What in the name of mischief!" cried a voice, and there was the mistress of the house standing in the doorway. Her gaze at first had merely taken in the fact that two strangers were standing screaming upon her and plush sofa. A glance at the fireplace, however, showed her the cause of the terror, and she burst into a hearty fit of laughter.

"Charley," she shouted, "here's Eliza misbehaving again."

"I'll settle her," answered a masculine voice, and the young man dashed into the room. He had a brown horsecloth in his hand, which he threw over the twine so as to effectually imprison its inmate, while his aunt ran across to reassure her visitors. "It is only a rock snake," she explained. "Oh, Bertha!" "Oh, Monica!" gasped the poor exhausted gentlewomen.

"She's batching out some eggs. That is why we have the fire, Eliza always does better when she is warth. She is a sweet, gentle creature, but no doubt she thought that you had designs upon her I suppose that you did not touch

Monica, with her thin black gloved hands thrown forward in abhorrence.

"Not away, but into the next room, said Mrs. Westmacott with the air of one whose word was law. "This way, if you please! It is less warm here." She led the way into a very handsomely appointed library, with three great cases of books, and upon the fourth side a long yellow table littered over with papers and scientific instruments. "Sit here, and you there," she continued. "That is right. Now, let me see, which of you is Miss Williams and which Miss Bertha

"I am Miss Williams," said Monica, still palpitating and glancing furtively about in dread of some new horror.

"And you live, as I understand, over at the pretty little cottage. It is very nice of you to call so early. I don't suppose that we shall get on, but still the intention is equally good." She crossed her legs and leaned her back against the marble mantelpiece. "We thought that perhaps we might be of some assistance," said Bertha timidly. "If there is anything which we could do to make you feel more at

"Oh, thank you; I am too old a traveler to feel anything but at home wherever I go. I've just come back from a few months in the Marquesas islands, where I had a very pleasant visit. That was where I got Eliza. In many respects the Marquesas islands now lead "Dear me!" ejaculated Miss Williams

"In what respect?" "In the relation of the sexes. They have worked out the great problem upon their own lines, and their isolated geographical position has helped them to come to a conclusion of their own. The woman there is, as she should be, in evcry way the absolute equal of the male. Come in, Charles, and sit down. Is Eliza all right?" "All right, aunt." "These are our neighbors, the Misses Williams. Perhaps they will have some stout. You might bring in a couple of bottles, Charles." "No, no, thank you! None for us!" cried her two visitors earnestly. "No? I am sorry that I have no tea to offer you. I look upon the subserviency of woman as largely due to her abandon-

On the 26th Denver and upon the Misses Walker, we of December, 1893, Freddie underwent a very severe illness, though perhaps the means to which he owes his recovery is not so generally known, and a statement of the case may be the means of helping some other sufferer. On the 26th "Then we shall call tomorrow," said December, 1893, Freddie was taken ill of man leading to heaven and hell, and was confined to his room and his bed until March, 1894. Two different physicianswere called in during his long illness. One said he had la grippe and the other ble errand. In their stiff crackling dresses that his trouble was rheumatic fever.

He was troubled with severe pains through the muscles of his legstand arms, and after three or four days was obliged to take to bed, where he lay nearly all winter, suffering terribly from the pains. He became reduced almost to a skeleton and was unable to relish food of any kind. During his illness he suffered relapte owing to trying to get up sooner than he should. Boy-like, he was anxious to get out and enjoy the beautiful spring sunshine, and for soveral days was carried out and taken for a drive. This brought on a relapse. The doctor was again call ed in and as he continued to grow worse he was ordered one; more to bed Things then looked very dark, as despite the medical care he did not get any bet ter. At last his father decided to try Dr. Williams' Pink Pills. Soon after beginning their use Freddio began to fee better. His appetite began to return and the pains grew less severe. As he continu ed the use of the Pink Pills he regained health and strength rapidly, and in about month was apparently as well as ever, the only remaining symptom of his try ing illness being a slight pain in the l-g. which did not disappear for several months. It is over one and a half years ago since F: eddie took his last pill, and in that time he has not had a recurrence of the attack. There is no doubt that Dr. Williams' Pink Pills cured him, and both the boy and his parents speak high y in their praise.

Dr. Williams' Pink Pills are the medibasket, making it fast with a piece of | cal marvel of the age. In hundreds of cases they have cured after all other medicines had failed. STRANGE PETITION TO COMMONS.

The Redmen of Naas River, British Co. umbia, Contrast Their Customs With Those of Their White Neighbors-Rumors About the Premiership. Ottawa, April 20.-(Special.)-One of the most curious peltions ever presented to the Canadian Parliament was that which was handed in by Col. Prior this afternoon. It is from the code prohibiting the celebration of potlach. The petition states that the Indians of Naas have been educated in the manners and customs of their ancestors, which they hold sacred. These laws and customs they desire to enjoy as their inheritance. In cities where civilization is supposed to exist churches are numerous, theatres are placed in various locations of those cities, while saloons multiply in num-bers. The petition says: "We respectfully submit that if the law permits the existence of these, the rights with regard to potlach should be re-The petition goes on to say that the white man celebrates July 1, May 24, and other holidays, without interference, when money is squandered in profusion without any corresponding benefit to the poor. When the Indian goes to the white man's theatre or other public entertainment, he pays for the privilege. On the contrary, when the Indian gives a dance, all guests are welcomed and given a present in token of good will. The Indian lands and fishing grounds have been handed over to others, and yet the Indian does not object. He buys a license to fish, a right which he previously enjoyed unmolested. Over the white man's grave monuments of white marble and granite are erected. These cost money. When an Indian dies his friends raise a large pole over his grave and distribute his personal property in token of sympathy and good will. This is what is termed a potlach, a privilege now denied the Indians. The petitioners say that the chief and the only opponents of the Indian customs are the missionaries, "who, in endeavoring to teach us, are very eager for us to give them our all for their benefit, and force us to buy all the goods which the Indians want from their stores, wherey they are greatly enriched.

The petition concludes by saying that under the terms of the union, the Briish Columbia Indians were guaranteed their rights, and they, therefore, ask for the repeal of the prohibition of

The Grand Trunk Suffering Considerable Loss-Farmers Along the River Front Complaining.

Last Fridsy morning the waters of the Burnt River overflowed the railway track near Fells' station, on the Haliburton branch, for the first time in fifteen years. Last summer the roadbed at that point was raised some 18 inches by Roadmaster Fergueon in order to remove any darger of such a thing happening, but at an early hour yesterday he received word that the unexpected had occurred, and that the water was even with the rails, with every probability of going higher. Mc. Ferguson at once ordered out a trair, and left in the course of an hour with eight or ten carloads of lumber of various sizes and a gang of men in order to repair possible damages. The ballast had not been washed away, but to make the track safe the track was elevated another 18 inches.

About 6 o'clock in the evening a message was received at the station here stating that a very serious wash-out had occurred on the Whitby and Port Perry division between Sonya and Saagrave, and Mr. Ferguson, after collecting a fresh force of about 30 men, along with necessary material, at once started for the scene. found a mile and a half of track flooded many feet deep in places, and the earth washed away to a depth of one to four feet here and there by the rushing flocd. He kept the men working like Trojans all night long, and at five a.m on Saturday they pulled into Port Perry, their task completed, when Conductor White was wired that he could start from Lindsay on time as usual. The line between Goodwood and Mark-

Roadmaster Caeer, of Orillia, took the repairs in hand, and found the track undermined at saveral points.
