The distressing facts were telephoned to many citizens after the physicians had examined his injuries, and on Sunday morning the sad newsspread like wild-fire. Everybody knew and liked Jack McMillan, and in every house in town there were anx- took place from the family residence, chances of recovery.

How the Accident Occurred.

The oatmeal mill, where deceased had been employed for several years, is operated night and day, the hands changing time week about. Last week McMillan and Geo. Bell were working at night, and on Saturday night about fifteen minutes to 11 prepared to close down the mill. To do this it was necessary to throw shift a clutch lever--also in the basement-which throws the mill machinery in and out of gear with the main shaft supplying power to the other departments, Bell, according to custom, made his way to the fourth floor to slacken the belt tightener, while Mc-Millan took a lantern and hastened to the basement to throw off the belt when it had been loosened above, and shift the clutch lever. When Bell had performed his part of the work he waitreceive the customary signalgiven by shaking the bett-that it had been thrown off the pulley, and when the de ay seemed longer than usual he ran down stairs to see what was the matter. When he reached the basement he saw a lantern lying on its side, and heard McMillan calling "My, does no one hear me.!" Bell called back "Where are you Jack-wait till I get the lantern," but when he had picked it up nothing could be heard above the whir of the machinery. Then he swung his lantern and noticed McMilmain shaft, and realizing that an ac- der of the Royal Caledonian Club of cident had occurred he dashed back | Manitoba attracted much attention, inup the stairs and out to the engine dicating as it did the sorrow felt by room to give warning. They found the left leg almost completely severed at the knee, and the bone proand checks, prices are 50c., 75c., $1.00, truding; the right leg had a terrible rectus muscle, both ends of which projected; below the right groin was a gash four inches or more in length, and quite deep; on the right side, above the hip bone, was a lacerated wound penetrating almost into the peritoneal cavity, from which the crest of the hip bone was removed; the left lung had been seriously injured; and in addition to these injuries there was a cut over the left eye, through the eyelid, a bad gash on the left wrist and a nasty scrape on the right elbow. Strange to say, the poor fellow had lost very little blood, the arteries appearign to have been choked by the severe crushing he had received.

Efforts to Save His Life. The medical men at once decided that his only chance lay in the amputation of the injured leg and the ligation of the severed arteries. He was placed under the influence of anaesthetics and the member was amputated from four to six inches above the point of partial severance so that the arteries and he said he hoped he would not have to To J.
