LINDSAY, FRIDAY, MAY 8, 1901.

Dear Eyes. O love, O wife, thine eyes are they, thy springs from out those shining gray lanes the sweet celestial streams that feed my life's bright Lake of Dreams.

A SENSIBLE BONNET.

"I am ready, Harry." Harry Cleveland raised his eyes from his paper, and quickly there came a comical expression on his handsome, bronzed face, and after surveying with wondering eyes his sister for a half minute, he asked: "What in the name of common sense have you got on your head, Nettie?"

understanding all around. After he went away, I received letters constantly, twice a week. "Excuse me, dear Claire. And those letters—what was the tone?"

"Oh, well, Claire, his is a different nature. You know the old saying, 'Still water runs deep.' I suppose Warren, did not wish to bind you by an engagement, until the time was near, when he could claim you, I never heard of his ever paying any attention to any other girl, or even calling on any."

"You forget Julia Cameron." "Well, she is a cousin." "A very distant one."

"I know how much you admired this opera, so I secured good seats." "Turning to Warren, he said: 'You will accompany us, Doctor?'"

"Of course he declined, and almost immediately arose to go. Perhaps I should have gone with him into the hall, and have answered him, and thus might have dispelled his doubts. Well, Harry, I have never seen him, to speak of, since."

"Claire, some one—possibly Julia Cameron—told him of William. Were you often with him?" "Yes, William is as ardent a lover of music as myself. He took me frequently to concerts and the opera. But he knew perfectly well of my correspondence with Dr. Forrester, and believed we were as good as engaged. I am sure he never regarded me other than a friend, and just cared for me anyway because I was your cousin. Don't you remember telling him to take care of me?"

"Yes, yes. Well, I know some one filled his heart and mind with doubts. You should have remembered all those ways, Claire. You would have been happier."

Tears filled Claire's eyes. She turned her head away, as her aunt entered the room. Harry returned to the bonnet subject, and a few moments after Claire went out.

"She is a dear good girl, really an angel of mercy. Many weary hearts bless her," Harry's mother said, as the door closed after Claire's retreating steps.

"I will not give you up now, Claire, unless you promise to come back to me very soon and remain forever." Claire gave the promise, and ran away into the house.

THE LOADED CANE.

One asks no questions as to the antecedents of those who meet around the campfire on plains, or in the cabin of the night boat, all the men met in these places have histories that they do not care to have made public, but many of them have. Some go to the border to seek adventure. And some to seek oblivion. One man more or one man less counts but little comment in the pioneer counties.

"Youngster, I haint heard anybody call you by any name yit, an' as you seem to be goin' to stop with us to night, I'd kind of like to know what name you say here to."

"The remark was addressed to a young man named Harry, who was sitting on a bench in the bar-room. He was a young man who had arrived about the middle of the afternoon.

"I answer to Mark Daming, landlord, and I'll stay with you to-night. One place is as good as another to me."

"So it has come at last. My poor old father is dead, and all that he has left to me is that old loaded cane. And to think that help of a cousin, who has supplanted me in my father's house, should have the nerve to write me such letters—surely he sends me the cane, the only thing left me by my father's will, in time, he hopes, to reach me for a Christmas gift. Curse him! If I had never let them know where he was he could not have sent it and added insult to injury."

"I have been forced to stop using it several times on this account. The writer has prescribed buttermilk, not only in cases of albuminuria, but likewise in cystitis and other affections of the urinary passages, with universally good effects. It has seemed to be indicative wherever mucilaginous drinks administered solely for their soothing effect, are prescribed. The amount of nitrogenous matters present probably adds somewhat to its merits, while the salts give a flavor not at all disagreeable, when it can be taken at all. On the whole, my use of this preparation, though restricted to affections of the kidneys and other organs connected therewith, for the most part has led me to esteem it highly and to believe it worthy of great confidence whenever the practitioner desires to excite the flow of urine, to modify its character or to soothe an inflamed and congested mucous surface over which this excretion is to pass."

"So you're here, after all," the watcher turned; "and my sister, has she, too, turned against me? Well, let it be so. I'll get even, no matter what comes of it. My legacy shall be the instrument of my revenge."

"You're cousin left you in my charge; will you come with me, Claire?" His voice was gentle, pleading. She raised her eyes to find in his all the love of years. Joyous tears filled her own, as she placed her hand in his, and was assisted into his carriage.

"My dear," said Dr. Bradley's wife, "While sitting in our church, last week, 'Judge Browne is dozing in a draught—He'll be so ill he cannot speak.' 'Oh! never mind, my dear,' said he, 'I'll cash the 'draft' some time next week.'"

A "slight cold" settling upon the lungs of one whose blood is tainted with scrofula, nearly always results in consumption. For removing scrofulous humors from the blood, curing scrofulous sores and ulcers, and Consumption (which is lung-scrofula) in its earlier stages, by removing their underlying cause, and for purifying the blood of all humors or poisons, no matter of what name or nature, as well as for toning up the system generally, Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery is acknowledged by all who know anything of it, to stand at the head of all remedies.

Therapeutic Uses of Buttermilk. Thus it will be seen that, on account of the large quantity of water and lactose, the fats being in much smaller quantities even than in milk that has been skimmed, an almost ideal diuretic and purgative is afforded.

When the Arterial Blood Flows Freely. The women of America are progressing in all directions at such a rate as to call forth comment from many parts of the world. They have taken off their little pinching, thin-soled shoes and let their toes spread out; they consequently walk more in the open air. They have untied their corset strings and breathe freer. They have cut down and opened up the high collar and can turn their heads about freely. They formerly knew little about personal comfort, and now they long for it. The young girl clings to her tennis or boating outfit, while the elder sister and mother wear their bedroom gowns as late as possible, and create occasions when they can appear in less-gowns. To the stout woman has gotten to come new form of dress, something entirely different from that we now have, and when women are as free as birds and look well, then we will have really advanced. An anatomist says that women, that is women generally, will not be able to do the brain work of men until the arterial blood is not restrained in passage by any bands, gages, bones or steels.

Friendship Cane. Friendship canes are to be the fashion with the young ones who take long Spring tramps "over moss and fell." The best friend of all gives the cane which is long and like unto an alpenstock. Around the top is tied a ribbon with the name of the cane donor thereon.
