Stephen Grane in N.Y. Journal. Athens, April 30 .- I was with the Greek army in its campaign towards Janina, the principal town of Epirae, the southwestern province of Turkey, when I heard the first rumors of the experience has taught us hard fighting in Thessaly.

The journey from Arta overland Thessaly requires a longer time than it does to go by the way of Athens, and so I have been fortunate enough to arrive in the capital in time to witness another popular outburst of the Athenians. Crowds are in the streets, in the square before the King's Palace, and in every place of public congregation. Practically every man in Athens is arming to go and fight the Turks. Every train into the city is loaded with other troops. Yesterday crowds broke into the gun shops and took the practicable wea-It was unanimous throughout all classes. To-day Greece is armed to fight

It is absurd to ay that the Greeks undertook this contest because they believed they would take Constantinople in a fortnight. Hafzi Pasha complained bitterly of the lawlessness and pillaging of the Albanians, and the palace council has therefore decided to distribute other regiments in that section." The Morning Post's correspondent at Constantinople says: "An Imperial irade has been issued approving the telegram sent by the military council to Edhem

GREEK PRESTIGE GONE.

Evident Bungling in the Handling of the Troops-An Utter Rout.

London, May 3 .- A despatch to The Daily News from Patras, on the west coast of Greece, and not far from Arta, dated Sunday, gives a most graphic account of the battle between the Greeks and the Turks at Pentepigadia, Epirus, and the retreat of the former from that place. It shows the rout and panic of the Greeks at Pentepigadia was as complete as the stampede which followed the fighting at Tyrnavos and the retreat of Larissa and Pharsalos, in Thes-

The Daily News' correspondent says: The net effect of the Greek retreat to Arta is that each army is now in the position which it occupied before war was declared, but with all prestige gone from the Greeks. The latter had held the hill near Pentepigadia on Wednesday evening against fierce Turkish attacks. The Greeks obviously needed to be reinforced, but, although considerable forces were near, no help was sent. On Thursday morning the Turkish fire was brisker and our guns on the crest of the hill, for some reason, were silent. The fury of the fire culminated at 3.30 p.m. The Turks' fire was easily distinguishable by reason of the sharper crack of the Martini rifles and it developed in the space of a quarter of an hour into living in the fillds behind the town, many the most terrific roar ever heard in any battle, diminishing to a fusilade in threequarters of an hour. The Turks in the meanwhile were massing upon the slopes on our right front, preparatory to rushing the hill. Yet, our guns on the central hill were silent after 20 minutes and were withdrawn. I asked a sergeant where the goas

Athens, May 3.-The Greek Government A moment later the Evzones tumbled

over the crest, firing as they came, the Turks following and firing incessantly as the kilted men ran down the hillside. It only remained to make good our retreat. The Turks continued to pour a smart Edhem Pasha Asking a Five Days' Armisfire at the Evzones. The latter eagerly responded, but it was obviously useless. Then someone gave an order and the Evzones, with a groan of disgust, left their position and moved sullenly, though in perfect order. The correspondent for The Daily News then describes the flight of the Greeks before the Turks. He then says When I left Arta on Friday morning the Greeks had not a man left on the Turkish side of the River Arakphos. I have never seen men so demoralized for so small a cause. They had neither seen the enemy nor felt his fire, yet 11,000 men and 40 guns melted away.
