It is asserted by well-known writers that one-fourth, and perhaps one-half, of the revenues of the Jewish people found its way into the coffers of the Jewish priests for one purpose or another. Why, then, speak of the Jew as giving but a tenth, and say that the Christian of to-day does very well encouraged to lay the flattering unction | lin and G. M. In the case of the latter a tenth-or $50-would not seem too much to give to the church of God, but in the case of the former the sum of $10, or even of them contribute nothing. Such a plan must be unjust. In the millenium period of the church on earth the proportion will not be one tenth for God and nine-tenths for ourselves, but the reverse,-nay, it will

If people would only give liberally and proportionately the work of the church might be increased a hundred-fold. Why, also, should the sad sight be seen of three or four evangelical ministers preaching the word in the one little village or hamlet. That could be remedied by amalgamation or friendly arrangement, and additional laborers thus gained for the work among the heathen peoples. If the church is ever to get a firm hold on the masses there must be newer and better methods. Christ went about among the poor and degraded, preaching, enring disease, and relieving the distress of the widow and the orphan; He gave all, even His life, for us. Are we doing all we can for Him? We are assured that should are those who possess great influence among their companions, and are qualified to be useful workers. Is the church to blame for this state of things? The speaker thought not-it is the fault of the young men themselves-they do not feel at home in the peaceful, devotional atmosphere of the church, but it may also be the fault to some extent of the active church workers and have no sympathy for the pursuits of the young. What is wanted is a better brand of Christians-there is a time to laugh and a time to weep, and the church that condemns the sports of youth can never hold its young men. There is no countenance, or even take part in. What was the secret of the late Henry Drumchristian, who did not thick a young man was going to perdition because he played or force in preaching, although it is a great a game of ball.
