BOBCAYGEON. A LUNGE THAT COST $1 50 A POUND .-Mr. Geo. W. Fitzgerald, Dominion fishery inspector, was called upon on Tuesday morning to adjudicate on a charge of illegal fishing. Robert Hayes was the guilty party, and John Ritchie was complainant. for some days the maskinonge and bass have been playing around below the dam in great numbers, and in full sight of anyone on the dam. Mr. Hayes is something of a hunter and fisherman, and at jigging suckers is a regular jim-dandy. For some days he strolled around the dam and managed to withstand the temptation, but on Monday the tempter was too much for him. The tempter was in the seductive form of a ten pound maskinonge, which was rubbing its sides on the corner of a pier, like a purring cat against a table leg. It was no use talking about statute laws: Hayes dropped his hook under the tempter's gill and spiggled him out as quick as winking. It would have been all right but for one thing, some pesky drop of gall has always to get into our cups of joy, and in this instance John Ritchie was the one to get the drop on Robert. It so happened that John was sitting by the riverside under the old elm tree, at the rear of the Forest house ruins, and observed the genial snigger perform the gentle snigging. The consequence was that the inspector came down and imposed a fine of $15. There were no costs, as Hayes admitted the soft impeachment, and so saved the necessity of i-suing any warrants or summons. She afterwards sent them a letter stating that she had not some of the articles in her possession, which it appears was the fact about the matter. It is upon this that the case is grounded. The magistrate was not satisfied with the evidence, and the charge is to stand for a forsnight on Mrs. Brown's own recogn'z ance. - [Chronicle.

A cossation was arranged after a good deal of this, and Pickle let Miller up. The latter, however, had improved his time while he was down to get possession of a big iron poker, and immediately upon rising let Pickle have it over the head a few times and hostilities were renewed for a while. Pickle then had Miller summoned before Nott, J. P., and he was fined $10 and costs. Miller now appeals against the decision and the above facts were gone over before the jury. Pickle admits having struck the firec blow in the fight, but claims that Miller became the aggressor when, after they had agreed to quit, Miller struck him with the poker, in short, Pickle claims there were two fights, while Miller maintains it was the same old scrap. Pickle also claims that Miller violated the law by using more violence than was necessary to repel the assault in this matter, provided it were held that the poker part was a continuation of the first conflict. The jury agreed with Nott, J. P., that there was too long a combat to be all in one round, and gave a verdict dismissing Miller's appeal. Ebbells for appellant; Paterson, Q. C., for defence..... He was not able to pay but gave orders on farmers he had thrashed for. He asked as a favor that his customers might not be pressed to soon, and suggested that Weldon, a brother-tu-law, was a safe man with whom the orders might be left for collection. This was done, Weldon promising to send the money as scon as any was paid in. None was ever paid in and Coomb collected the money himself a long time afterwards. Now White Bros. sue Weldon for not collecting. He claims he never
