By A. Conna Doyle. "Well, well, it's rather a delicate question to answer," said Mr. Proudie, with a show of embarrassment.

"Then you wish to buy my pension?" "Yes, for £2,000 down." "And if I live for 20 years?" "Oh, in that case of course my speculation would be more successful."

"You should have £1,000 at once. The other £1,000 I should expect you to take in furniture." "In furniture?" "Yes, admiral. We shall do you a beautiful houseful at that sum."

"You're quite right, Westmacott," said he. "We'll have a little walk before we settle it." "But I may not be here this afternoon."

"Then we must choose another day." "But why not settle it now?" "Because I prefer not," said the admiral shortly.

"Very well. But remember that my offer is only for today. It is off unless you take it at once." "Let it be off, then." "How much?" "A guinea." The admiral threw £1 is upon the table.

"I don't like it," said Charles when they found themselves in the street once more. "I don't profess to be a very sharp chap, but this is a trifle too thin."
