> -The case of Steele v. Canadian Mutual Aid Association, an action to recover $850 for total disability, was tried at Stratford the other day. On Sept. 21, 1891, the plaintiff had his hands crushed by being run over by an M. C. R. train on the Hamilton road, London. Plaintiff claimed that he was walking along when a hand caught his throat. He became unconscious and remembered nothing till he felt the wheels of the train passing over his hands. Defendant claimed the injuries were selfinflicted, and a witness testified that he saw plaintiff place his hands on the rails. Evidence as to the contradictory statement of the plaintiff was also given, as well as evidence as to requests made by him when taken to the hospital that both hands be amputated. Plaintiff was insured with the Canadian Mutual Aid Association for $1,700, in the Provincial Provident for $5 000 and in the Independent Foresters for $3,000, half of which insurance he would receive upon total disability. A few days before his injuries he took out an accident policy in the Hartford for $10,000 and the day he left the city he took a $3 000 policy in the Accident Ins. Co. of British North America. He was to receive the whole of the Hartford policy on the loss of both hands. This company settled their claim for $1,666. The jury could not agree and were discharged.
