AT THE WORLD'S FAIR. DESCRIPTIVE LETTER BY A LINDSAY VISITOR.

RAMBLES THROUGH THE MINES AND MINING, HORTICULTURAL AND CHILDREN'S BUILDINGS—THE BEAUTIES OF WOODED ISLET.

Separated from the Manufacturers building by the North Canal is the electrical building, containing some of the most interesting exhibits at the fair. It is a large building covering about 55 acres, and is handsomely decorated within. The exhibits in this building are chiefly interesting to scientists interested in electricity.

THE SOUTH-EAST CORNER OF THE BUILDING is a pretty little electric scene theatre which is so unassuming in its outside appearance that one might easily miss it, and is yet so interesting and pretty that one would be very sorry to do so.

THE MINING EXHIBIT. The next building in the court of honor is that devoted to mines and mining. Mining is represented over the main doorway as a colossal female figure draped after the manner of the Greeks, holding in one hand a miner's lamp and in the other a pick.

THE BUILDINGS ON WOODED ISLET. Passing out the north door of the Mines building, you and yourself facing the lagoon and Wooded Island. This large island is a never-ending source of delight and pleasure to the visitors at the fair.

WOODVILLE FAIR. The annual fair of the Eldon Agricultural Society was held here this week, on the society's new grounds. The first day, Tuesday, the attendance was not very large, and as this is the first year that the society has held a day and night fair, it was quite a disappointment.

Australian squatter's hut. There are no other buildings on the island until you come to the very other end, where are situated the two houses built by the Japanese government and presented, I believe, to the city of Chicago. They are quaint and pretty, with latest extension rooms turned up at the corners and the bamboo railing around the verandahs. They are handsomely furnished as Japanese understand furnishing, but one needs a guide to know what all the peculiar looking articles are, for I heard two ladies one day having a discussion as to whether an article of furniture standing against the wall was shelves for books, or a cupboard for china, or a bed. They left without deciding it, and I left in some blissful state.

WOODED ISLET is always pretty, but like many other things, sometimes it is prettier than others, and its prettiest time is at night, when it is illuminated. Every wall is lined on both sides with Chinese lanterns, every flower bed and piece of shrubbery is outlined near the ground by strings of colored glass cups, in which candles are lit, in every direction to the shore. Add to all this bands of music on the shores, rockets bursting in every direction, strings of fireworks across the lagoon, and the towers and snow-white peaks of these marvellous buildings shining through the trees and rising up all about you.
