In other words, the Canada Life holds more than half as much insurance in Canada as all the other ten Canadian companies, while its total income is also over half as great as the total income of all the other companies. In the combined requisites of a great company the Canada life has no compeer in the Dominion. Its position is unique.

LINDSAY, FRIDAY, OCT. 30, 1896

THE WARDER AND MR. M'LAUGHLIN.

The Warder, in yesterday's issue, magnifies the difference between THE POST and The Globe on the subject of dismissal of officials, as if it were a quarrel. Of course, there is a sinister object in this, as there is in most of the attitudes taken by the Warder. It is the proud boast of liberals throughout the universe that the slave-like servility of toryism is foreign to their nature, and that the very marrow of liberalism necessitates honest difference of opinion, but it is likewise their boast that a nice sense of honor never permits one of them to stab another behind the back, or, sneak-like, hit below the belt. Where in the liberal ranks can you find one despicable enough to laud and magnify, one week, their then leader, and the next, spit on him because another's star is in the ascendant? Where, indeed, will you find in history, except in tory ranks, men so degraded as to lickspittle a leader in his presence, and behind his back sneer at him as an old imbecile? Where, indeed, except in toryism, do you find a leader cry out in the agony of his heart "My God, for six months I have been among a nest of traitors!" one of whom is the M. P. for North Victoria and editor of The Warder.

When liberals cannot agree, they agree to disagree. They no longer hold on to the flesh-pots. Liberals hold on to honor and let the flesh-pots go. Tories hold on the flesh-pots and let honor go. This is history, and never was it more distinctly so than in the contest of toryism prior to the 23rd of June last, and never in one man was this kind of toryism more rampant than in the M. P. for North Victoria.

His attack on Mr. McLaughlin comes with peculiar grace, indeed. Mr. Hughes is the man who was instrumental in turning out a widow from being postmistress, and was cruel enough to rake up ancient history as an excuse, when the sinister object was to recompense a man by an office for having made several declarations as to voters, three of which were absolutely untrue. Other officers were in some way dismissed or called to resign, and yet Mr. Hughes attacks Mr. McLaughlin for insisting upon a policy which his leader, Sir Charles Tupper, has himself laid down, not only by word of mouth, but by practice likewise. The tories may just as well let up in their present hypocritical cry of the guillotine; whatever name they may give the weapon, it is the same weapon that they themselves unsparingly used, but with the distinction that the liberals apply it after trial and conviction. The tories applied it without and before trial and conviction. Liberals estimate the present pseudo sense of tory complaint at its true worth and intent, and they furthermore know that when the tories succeed in saving the neck of their partizan and offensive allies, they will laugh and chuckle at the weakness of the hand that spared them.

WITHOUT A PRECEDENT.

The case of the prisoner Hewell, shot in his cell at Kingston, still continues to be subject for comment both by press and public. The grand jury at the Kingston assizes, at present in session, reported that "the shooting of the late convict "Hewell by Chief Keeper Hughes was "fully justified, but hoped that in future "measures will be taken to render such an "occurrence unnecessary." As read between the lines, this justification expresses a good deal of censure, and is equivalent to "Not guilty, but don't do it again," as was also the case at the coroner's inquest. Judge Ferguson, in thanking the jury, declined to refer to the shooting of Hewell, as it did not come within his province, being under direct government control.

Last week Warden Metcalfe is reported to have assembled the prison officials and read to them a paper, said to be from the department of justice, commending the courage and obedience of the keepers, and remarking that discipline must be maintained at any cost, and adding that prisoners who resist authority do so at their own peril.

All this may be true, yet still be far from justifying the orders given to him, as sworn to by Chief Keeper Hughes, and contrary to his own better judgment and advice, to at once take the prisoner to the dark dungeon, "and if he don't give up the shears, shoot him." Chief Hughes ought to have considered that, whatever may be a keeper's duty where prisoners attempt to escape, it is not given to Warden Metcalfe or any prison official, high or low, to issue orders virtually involving sentence of death on any man securely confined, as Hewell was, behind steel gratings, simply as a matter of discipline. Nor has any such official the power even to order a single stripe to the back of any. Only by a judge's sentence can such be laid on.

Human life in Canada is not to be considered a matter of heads or tails. Wherefore did we spend thousands of dollars of the hard-earned taxes of poor men to determine by most careful trial before judge and jury whether Hewell should be hanged for his awful crime or imprisoned for life? If human life is to be a matter of pitch and toss for prison officials, then our solemn enquiry by judge and jury is an extravagant farce. We venture to say that such an order as that given by Warden Metcalfe, virtually ordering a file of armed men to shoot a prisoner behind iron bars, is without a parallel in the history of British officials. Hewell had attempted no escape and was shot down in his cell simply as an incident of discipline. Warden Metcalfe ought to have taken the trouble to have gone himself where he considered matters were grave enough for a death sentence, instead of going, as his evidence shows, "over to his luncheon."

The press, the official, or the citizen, who lightly estimates the taking of human life, is the enemy of law and order and a menace to society. Hewell no doubt was a bad man, and was serving out the punishment placed upon him by the law which spared his life, and those who justify his tragic fate by connecting it with his crime show lack of reasoning power.

We recognize the physical courage of Chief Hughes in the very difficult position in which he was placed when the warden, declining his humane and reasonable suggestion of delay till the prisoner's frenzy abated, gave him such unprecedented and imperative commands, and we consider that the public interest demands the fullest investigation of the whole matter a the hands of Sir Oliver Mowat, the minister of justice.

EDITORIAL NOTES

Sir David McPherson owed Canada much, but he died worth $640,613.19, and left not a penny to any public institution or to charity.

Toronto Telegram: To the approaching conservative convention the will and wish of Sir Charles Tupper promises to be a law even more sacred and binding than the constitution for whose sweet sake the party so everlastingly smashed itself.

The Toronto News, one of the bitterest and most irreconcileable of the tory organs, is favorably impressed with the work of Mr. A. W Campbell, the Ontario road commissioner, and says his appointment "is an act for which the next generation will rise up and call the Hardy government blessed."

It appears that Mr. Bryan is the recipient of all sorts of unconsidered trifles, made of silver, from his admirers. Some cranks at St. Louis gave him a silver horse shoe to be placed over the White House door when he gets there. At Minneapolis he received a silver inkstand, and at St. Paul a silver penholder to sign the free coinage bill. But prying eyes detected that the silver penholder contained a gold pen, which causes the New York Mail to observe that the silver may be ornamental but it takes gold to do the work after all.

Hamilton Times: When a convict who is safely locked in a strongly barred cell becomes possessed of a pair of shears, and from brooding over fancied persecution becomes "the worst maniac" old keepers ever saw, ought a warden to order guards to immediately go in and take him to the dungeon for punishment, and "if he resists shoot him"? Would it not be wiser to let him starve a while in his cage, or even to turn the hose on him till he cooled off? When a man is "a maniac" it is manifestly absurd to expect sane conduct from him. Warden Metcalfe, of Kingston penitentiary, has shown that he is unfit for his position. The more certain papers defend him the more injudicious his course appears. Shooting a crazy convict in an iron cage may not be murder, but it is not expert penology.

From the London Free Press we learn that a thriving business is done in shipping apples from that part to the Southern States, and that the trade has stiffened prices. The sixty million market is not so much despised now as during the election campaign.

It our people want to see Canadian products become popular in Britain they must earn distinction for quality and honesty. The big apples must not at all be at the top of the barrel. When the name "Canadian" is made a guarantee of excellence we shall find our goods sought after.

Hamilton Times; What with civil servants as editorial writers for partisan tory sheets; civil servants as pipe-layers for tory conventions; and civil servants as spies in the government offices, this was hardly the time for Mr. Tarte to take a trip. There is to much work to be by his keen-edged guillotine blade.

Sir Oliver Mowat's opinion is that the city council of Toronto is not required to submit the Sunday car question to the electors, but may require any conditions it pleases as to the hours of service and rates of fare as conditions precedent to the vote. If that opinion is sustained, there seems little likelihood of a vote being taken, as the majority of the present council insist on conditions to which the company refuses agreement. The question will probably go over and be a factor in the municipal elections.

The Mail and Empire which a ew weeks ago was railing at the government because it desired time to consult the interests of all the citizens before bringing down a tariff, now asserts that there will be no "thorough investigations," but that "half a dozen places, in probably as many days," will be visited before the work is begun, and it wails over the disregard of the business interests of the country." It is to be feared the poor old Mail and Empire has determined not to be pleased with the liberal tariff,

The Globe's Ottawa correspondent says: "The prediction that Mr. Fielding must negotiate a loan may or may not turn out true, but the government can do their best to avoid it by keeping out of such uncalled for and unpopular extravagances as an expenditure of fifteen millions in subsidies to a twenty-knot Atlantic service designed to carry a few people and a little express freight quickly over the ocean. The new government may make the mistake of being economical in little things only, but it takes a lot of cheeseparing to make up $750,000 a year, the amount the late government were pledged to grant for a fast Atlantic service."

COMMUNICATIONS.

The Warder's Unfair Charge

[To the Editor of THE POST.]

DEAR SIR,—In view of the silly attack made in the Warder of last week on me, I enclose you copy of the letter referred to for publication, leaving out only the name of the party to whom it was written, and the name of the office which he holds, as I am sure he regrets very sincerely the publicity given to this letter, which was written to him in a friendly spirit, and which he received in a like spirit.

I have felt, anyway, it the proper thing to give to any official complained against previous notice of the nature of the charges, so that he might have the fullest opportunity to defend himself, or to resign if he did not care to do so, and that there should be no more underhand work.

Anyone reading this letter will see at once the falseness of Mr. Hughes' charges, as well as the envious and bitter spirit in which they were made.

The following is the letter:—

DEAR SIR,—In pursuance of the policy which the government adopted respecting civil servants who were active politicians, it will be my duty to recommend the vacation of (naming the office held by him) I thought it due to the friendly relations that have always existed between us to notify you personally, and you could take what action you thought proper under the circumstances.—Yours truly, (Sgd) R. J. McLAUGHLIN.

Yours truly, R. J. McLAUGHLIN.

Lindsay, Oct. 27th, 1896.

Can Our System of Taxation be Improved?

[To the Editor of THE POST.]

DEAR SIR,—I hope our townspeople do not lose sight of the absurdity of the present system of taxation. How ridiculous would the following transaction be considered: A person selling two adjacent lots of equal value finds that the first purchaser will build an $800 house only, and charges a comparatively moderate price for the land in consequence. The second buyer intends spending $2,500 on his house and stable, and the seller, on ascertaining this, raises the price of the lot correspondingly. This is the same principle as that of our present tax system, only that in the above case the improvements are going to be made, and in the other they have been made.

What poor encouragement to the man who proposed to build the better house would the increased price of the lot be? What a damper to the improvement of property is the fear of consequent increase of taxes?—Yours truly, S. INGLE TAX.

A friend furnishes me with the following facts: In New Zealand, about 1889, a change of ministry occurred at a time when the colony was so bankrupt as to be unable to raise a loan. The new government adopted a partial system of free trade and tax on land values that produced speedy relief and return of confidence. Profiting by the experience of New Zealand, New South Wales made a very radical change in their revenue matters something more than a year ago. The new budget was so brief and simple as to seem absurdly inadequate to many, but a year's operation has shown its value. There are three items, 2½d. per dollar on incomes over $2,000, two-fifths of a cent on all land values (apart from improvements) and duty on the import or manufacture of opium, tobacco and spirits. With their population of about a million they have produced a surplus of $1,650,000, the number of unemployed is much less, trade has largely increased, and they have 2,000 settlers on land previously vacant. Under the system adopted it is not so profitable for speculators to hold land. The reduced cost of necessaries, the reduction of taxes on small incomes, and the land being open for use at more reasonable cost, has given many (who would otherwise have remained poorly paid wage-earners) a chance to become independent that they would never have had under the old conditions. The value of the change is demonstrated by the increase of settlers, the greater area of land brought into use, and the reduction in the number of the unemployed.
