It was well-known that the crowd at last year's fair to welcome Lord Aberdeen, last year's fair to welcome Lord Aberdeen, governor-general, and his amiable lady, was the largest ever seen in Lindsay, and so the fair receipts proved. This morning the same infallible authority was employed to convince our reporter that ployed to convince our reporter that yesterday's throng at the fair exceeded that of last year by a considerable number. This is indeed highly satisfactory, and establishes the fact that the Lindsay Central, as a farmers' fair pure and simple, possesses merits peculiarly its own, and on which it can depend every time, independent of outside big wigs. So may it continue.

So may it continue.

It is now beyond doubt that the fair directors will have some hundreds of dollars mere to apportion for various purposes than last year, and we would suggest that a portion of the surplus be set aside for attractions for next year's fair. All admit that in this respect the directors have been somewhat remiss this year, and it allowed to happen again the result may if allowed to happen again the result may be that the success of the fair may be serioasly imperilled.
