Eleven other persons were injured. The Marquis of Tweeddale said at the time of the accident the express was travelling at the rate of 60 miles an hour. The goods train into which the express ran was loaded with iron. Among the killed were the driver of the goods train and the stoker of the express train. The driver of the express trein had both thighs smashed. The escape of the wrecked Pullman car was little short of miraculous. The wheelwere torn off, but the body of the coach stood the crash with but little damage. Pintoned beneath the huge engine the rescuing party saw a woman screaming for help, but they were power'ese to aid her and she was burned to death. The fire burned flercely until noon, when the flames were gotten under control. The engineer of the express train, himself badly injured and held down by the debrie, implored the rescuers to save the passengers and not mind bim The accident was due to the signalman falling asleep at his post.
