This he declined to do, being under the impression that the conservative party would suffer from his leadership; and so it came about that Sir John Abbott was selected, This latter selection, as every one knows, was simply a temporary expedient; for during his premiership the public mind was skilfully educated for the advent of the late premier the moment Sir John Abbott would step down and out from office. His mind was evidently a judicial one, and all his acts and conduct were marked by a judicial tone. This gave him a dignified course, in rather pleasing contrast to that of the late Sir John Macdonald. He was apparently of a stoic disposition, and very calm in temperament. When angered or aroused the only indication thereof would be a sudden and slight elevation of the eyebrows, and those who knew him best have said that this betokened a tremendous spirit of wrathful anger beneath that calm interior. There is no doubt that he sympathized very little with the tough coterie of supporters, numbering 12 or 15, who in rough and rude methods, professed their layalty for the man. It is supposed the excitement of the ceremony through which he had passed so told on him that he broke down under the strain, for in the ministers' lunch room he again renewed his complaint of the morning that he was feeling unwell. Luncheon, from the table. His companions, including Lord Ripon, signified their sorrow at his state of health, and Sir John was led by room adjoining the ministers' lunch room. There Sir John sat down on a couch and leaned forward on his hands. He appeared to be intense pain; his agitation was also great. Suddenly the sick man rose partly from the couch, he appeared to grope in darkness, then he fell back in a swoon.

"SIR JOHN THOMPSON IS DEAD," Death came with terrible swiftness. The attendant gave the alarm and the ministers at luncheon caught it up. There was a rush for the writing room by the ministers. When the doctor, hastily summoned, had reached the side of the prostrated man, life had fled. Heart disease was probably the direct cause of

The Cheese Question.

The Montreal Gazette says :- It is no use blinking at the fact that considerable feeling has been aroused in London among the cheese trade by the action of ome of the Canadian exporters. The discussion that is taking place is not confined to one firm, but is shared in by all the leading houses. They are urging that Canadian legislation should be passed providing for the marking on cheese of the month in which it is It does not appear that he was a selfish eat anything and asked to be excused to those shipping who act fairly and squarely. It will only affect those who have been sending over June and in the interest of this large and growing trade it one of the royal attendants to the writing, felt in Canadian cheese, and the reputation it has acquired in British markets, should be maintained. The question is not a new one. It has been discussed over and over again during the past few years, and was brought to the notice of Prof. Robertson when he last visited the United Kingdom The Australians are endeavoring to secure a portion of the British cheese trade, and the minister of agriculture in New South Wales is devoting much attention to the matter. It is announced in one of the Sydney papers was sold in the Sydney market at 1d a pound, contained 1,25 per cent. more fat and 4 78 per cent. less water than cheese sent from Ontario as a specimen of high class Canadian make, which sells freely in the English market. In point of difference of quality a report of the inspector of agriculture states that the fear, however, that Canadian cheese will not continue to hold its own in Great Britain, and that the market for 't will be developed; but there must be entire confidence between the exporters and importers if [Note,-In connection with the above we may say that the week preylous to the arrival of the English desputch concerning the frauds in cheese we were informed of the facts of the case while in conversation with a gentleman in the employ of one of the largest cheese buying firms in Ontario. In answer to a quesdumped upon the market within a short period, be. get quite cool. Then take a box the right size, put some clean dry straw in the bottom, then a layer of months, and then the secret came out. It was cusfowl breast up and as close together as possible; then a layer of straw, then a layer of fowl, and so on till a layer of straw, then a layer of fowl, and so on till cold storage in Montreal, and sell the same later on as the September and October article, thus obtaining a question, 'In there any cheese of June, ifuly and August makes sold in England," he replied, "Were Berters, who cannot afford to allow their money to and hence nothing had come of it.
