Which turn'd my jackets into coats, And freed me from a nurse's sway, I used to love those nursery rhymes, They seem'd endow'd with every beauty:

I fondly thought that they contain'd

A perfect code of human duty. Years pass'd away, and, now grown old, I once again those verses read; But oh! they did not seem the same, The faith of innecence had fled.

So now, when I would fain repeat Those lines, so dear to memory still, My tongue refuses to obev; I cannot speak the words I will.

But, howsoever hard I try, New words appear, I know not whence Which change the spirit of the verse, And seem to alter all the sense.

"How doth the happy lazy drone Employ the shining hours?

By eating what the busy bees Have gather'd from the flowers." " Birds in their little nests agree

Tis true. But what about? They all agree in trying hard To turn each other out." "Let dogs delight to bark and bite,

For 'tis their nature too; Then don't complain if some fine day They bark and bite at you." "When shines the sun, and rain is past,

Make hay, get in your crops; But what the Dickens must one do, Suppose it never stops 2" "The early bird, the proverb says,

The early worm devours; Then lest you be that early worm, Abandon early hours."

Alas for childhood's early faith! Comparing old with new; I like the latter quite as well, And think them just as true.
