

For THE EXPOSITOR.
The Effects of Rum.
A well-dressed man was walking down the street.
With active step he quickly sped along.
When suddenly a "friend" (O) he chanced to meet,
A "friend" he called him, whether right or wrong.

"Why in such haste?" he to the former cried.
"Stop, let us have a drink for friendship's sake."
"I have no time to spare," the man replied.
"Pshaw," said his friend, "I will but a minute take."

Thus lured by one who spoke in friendship's guise,
He yielded to his enemy, not friend,
Entered the tavern door with blinded eyes,
Alas! he did not see his awful end.

His enemy—the man that took him in
Called for a "drink"—each drained the poisonous bowl.
One glass apiece—sufficient to begin
The ruin of the body and the soul.

Another drink was called—this by the first,
The business man who first refused to stop.
And thus they both went on their raging thirst
Increasing as they drank each burning drop.

Soon home and friend and everything beside
Was by the two inebriates forgot,
Till on the floor—the other by his side—
Lay the late business man, a drunken sod.

And thus the hours of morning passed away,
The evening came, and still the man of trust,
Respect and honor in the bar-room lay,
Covered, but not concealed, with shame and dust.

The morning came, the man had not been home,
His anxious wife had waited but in vain,
Through the long night had watched for him to come,
And wondered what could him so long detain.

Ah! little does she yet the truth surmise,
(But one short year have they united been),
That in his breast the rum fiend hidden lies,
Though never has it yet by her been seen.

But ere the day is pass'd the tale is told,
And homeward to his now distracted wife
Is borne the husband's body, stiff and cold,
For rum had robbed him of his very life!

Give heed, O tempter! shun the tempter's snare,
Resolve no more to touch the poison'd bowl;
Accept the warning, and of rum beware,
And thus preserve your body and your soul.

Liquor Laws and their Effects.
A correspondent of the Perth Courier, writing from Newburyport, Mass., relates the result of his observations of the effect of the liquor laws in that State. The generally fair statements of the success and drawbacks of the law, contained in the extract appended, must commend itself to the judgment of all who read it.

"As your readers doubtless know, we have prohibition in this State, and a pretty rigid enforcement of the law. It is now several years since the general sale of intoxicating liquors was permitted. It has, till recently, been a question whether cider, and lager beer shall be licensed, the stronger stimulants being under the ban. Some of the large towns have hitherto permitted the sale of the ale, by the way, each year others have rigidly proscribed everything but milk, water, ginger-beer and "pop," the latter being almost considered a little doubtful. The last session of our State Legislature has taken from city and municipal government the power of licensing any beverages that intoxicate. It was practically found that you cannot grant the sale of strong beer without allowing the sale of whiskey, gin, etc. The ale dealers will carry a convenient flask in their pockets, with which they would treat their friends, or those whose stomachs require them, with that noisy drink, ale; or else a bottle of new rum, bought and kept in the house for special occasions, would come into requisition oftener than needed for purposes of sickness. Our State and city constables have been very efficient, and seizures of demi-johns of whiskey, rum, and "mixed liquors" have been continually made at the domiciles of ale dealers, who, when said dealers were compelled to answer at next court, to the tune of $50, $75 or $100 and costs; some even being, for repeated offences, compelled to serve a term of months in the County Jail. The past winter was noted for a brilliant series of achievements of this kind, hardly one of our liquor dealers escaping seizures and heavy penalties. Our Legislature, wisely, I think, put a stop to the sale of ale, and shut up all places where liquors have been dispensed. If the ale dealers will take an ell every time an inch is granted, every inch must be taken from them. Those that will drink must be obliged to find their dram in some underground hole where the light of day never enters, and it must be made discretionary either to tipple, or furnish the wherewithal to tipple. The first of May this law went into force. Since then we have had uncommonly quiet times. If any liquor is sold, it is only by the way of a present, or for medicinal purposes, and they have to be uncommonly wise. I presume one could get glass of hot toddy if he were to go down to—, or black Tom's, or even at—House, if he were to give the proper wink and ask for a lemonade or temperance syrup, but he might loiter about these places for a month without being asked to drink or treat, or knowing that the "critter" was there. The result is that it is hardly possible to get a glass of ale even for sickness, some of our invalids being put to the inconvenience of ordering half a barrel from Portsmouth, or none at all. The wines and whiskeys and kindred liquors are dispensed by the apothecaries as medicine, though I am sure that the "O" is not a physician's prescription. Some are strict and some are not. The last time I was at Mrs. —'s Drug store I saw at least half a dozen notorious bunnies hanging around. One had a sore leg, and was advised to bathe it in new rum. Another had a cold and his doctor had advised a little punch. Another wanted a little gin for horse medicine. The apothecary told me that he was pestered continually by such characters, and that all sorts of dodges were practised to obtain a little of the "O" by jolly. Even physicians are called upon to prescribe alcoholic liquors for the most trivial ailments, and more than one bottle of rum marked "Wash" has gone to bathe the mucus membrane of some hardened bummer. In short the law is working well. There is only one improvement needed, and that is, withdrawing the apothecaries from the sale of the wine of consumption. Then one liquor agency for each city or town, under most stringent regulations, will be appointed. It would be better if the manufacture is to be prevented. For opposing that now and then one dies for the want of the alcoholic stimulant at right time? or suppose that some with weak stomachs, &c., suffer for the want of a little "tonic," how many would be saved from poverty and ruin by the entire suppression of the liquor business? Perhaps, however, it is not warranted to expect such Utopian good times. Human nature is bad enough yet, and the first for stimulants is treacherous. If it is not one thing it is another, and a certain portion of the human race seem predestinated to a course of madness, folly and self-destruction. It is only by slow and steady degrees that any great reform is effected. The tendency of things, however, is toward Progress and a high evolution, is the opinion of your correspondent."

LABOR saving implements give the farmer power and time. Power to cultivate the soil—time to cultivate the mind.
MANURE—Save every material from which manure can be made, and in a few years the soil will show the effects of the care bestowed upon it in extra crops.

The Mesford Monitor begins the sixth volume with a new outfit of small, clear news type, which will enable them to give an increased quantity of reading, without making the paper excessively large. It is a good local newspaper, deserving the large patronage this improvement indicates.

BASE BALL—Quite a large number of Orillians, accompanied the "Merry Nine" to Bracebridge, on Wednesday last, to witness the base-ball match, between that club and the Bracebridge club. The game commenced yesterday at 10 a. m., and resulted in favor of Orillia by 35 runs. A last evening the Orillia "boys" gave a Last evening in the Orange Hall—Gazette.

EXPLOSION IN THE ATTEMPT.—A hen, the property of Mr. D. O. Jans, of Craigevale, died last week; the cause of her death being somewhat peculiar. It seems that her owner, who had been talking about some big eggs he had read of in THE EXPOSITOR, and being very ambitious, determined that her own very small possession, the biggest egg out, but she perished in the attempt, declaring with her last breath that some goose had cruelly hoaxed the editor and herself.—Examiner.

MIDLAND RAILWAY.—The Orillia Passenger Coach, which was damaged at the accident a short time ago, by rolling down the embankment, is again on the road, looking as handsome as a picture, and as good as new. The whole train, consisting of baggage and express freight car, post office car, smoking car, and coach, have been repainted, and present a handsome and attractive appearance. The road is carrying timber and lumber to its fullest capacity at present, and is doing a very extensive business. Mr. Hugel's energy is making itself felt in every department, and many important improvements have been constantly at work since the Presidency. We understand the Orillia extension will soon be as perfect as any piece of Railway in the Dominion, and trains will shortly be running constantly at work since the first of May last, widening the cuts and embankments, and improving the grading wherever required. Large quantities of gravel have been put on the road bed, making it more permanent and safe. Still further improvements are in contemplation, and the entire road will soon be one of the best in the country.—Port Hope Times.
