The savings-bank is a safe debtor. Fifty cents for a good lecture, is better than half that money for a circus. Dress neatly. A well clothed man commands favor and respect, while one in slovenly attire can hardly borrow his neighbour's saw horse.

The laboring man holds the same relation to the merchant, manufacturer, attorney, physician and minister, that the locomotive does to the train of elegant and well-filled cars : they would stand still for ever if the engine did not move them. There is many an honest, hard-working poor man, who rises himself and calls hi family before sunrise, three hundred and sixty-five days in the year. In nine cases out of tee, when his children arrive at his age, they will be called up by servants. A meerscham-pipe and bank-book al-ways quarrel, and the upshot of the en-counter generally is, that one puts the other out of doors. Work harderatdrilling rocks, for instance, if your imployer never visits you than if he frequently does. He will know of your faithfulness when he pays for the drills. The poverty of childhood is more frehis hands. It costs a poor man more to let his chil-dren wander in their every day clothing, Sabbath days, than it does to dress them for church. Want is a far less uncomfortable companion than debt. Never envy a rich neighbor; his boys will drive your children's carriages. A poor man's character is worth two dollars to him, where his hands are worth one. A full purse and a brandy bottle rarely occupy opposite pockets in the same coat Never dodge a dirty job. The riches deposits of gold are frequently overlaid by the deepest debris.

It Can't be Done. In all the business of life do we hear this complaint made by the doubting ones, who find it easier to be content with things as they are, than to exert themselves to secure them as they should be. The progressive man meets these doubters at every step, and finds them ofttimes the most serious obstacles in his path. As it is not their nature to keep out of the way, but to constantly intrude their presence, he must from necessity jostle them aside or stride over then mighty pretensions. It is time and breath wasted to argue with them. They are already convinced, and generally lack sufficient wisdom to change their opinions. If in spite of their doleful croakings, he gets by and beyond them, they catch at his coat skirts or follow in his wake belit! ing and deriding his most eminent success. We have no idea of attempting to remodel the world; neither to rid ourselves of any people in it. If, however, we were inclined to undertake such an enterprise we should naturally pay our respects, negatively, to just this class. Some of them are toler ably successful in their own specialties, and were they able to see beyond their own circumscribed limits, might comprehend that there are a few other people in the world equally as smart and successful as themselves, and that all are devoted to the same class of labour.
