He also pointed out word when opportunity offers, to the victim of intemperance, and endeavour to lead him back to sobriety. The Rev. Kennedy Creighton, Wesleyan Minister, gave a shert address, quoting statistics to show the extent and evils o the liquor traffic. He had been a teetotaller forty years, and never had cause to regret it. There are few even amongst total abstainers who had not either directly or indirectly felt the effects of the traffic. Thirty-five or forty years ago temperance had to encounter much active opposition, but now it is different. Everyone pro fesses friendship for the temperance cause. He advised caution in our intercourse with those who profess friendship for the eause, but avoid taking any active part in removing the liquor traffic and drinking customs. At the same time he did not advise them to make a hobby of it. The Division room should be to a great extent a place to prepare for the labours outside-agitate, petition the Legislature and educate the public mind. Over-zeal he esteemed preferrable to lukewarmness in such a movement. He related some personal experiences going to show that, though liquor may be beneficial as a medicine at times, a not overstrong frame is quite capable of enduring hardship, without requiring any stimulants. He would like to have seen more of the senior members of the com-this good cause. The Chairman said, in reference to remarks of the preceeding and another previous speaker, as to the necessity for work outside of the Division Room, that some professing friendship for the cause, pretended to be alarmed lest the zeal of those engaged in the work should do it injury. The fear with them was, not that the Temperance workers would confine their labours to a limited sphere, but that they might do too much.
