SOLEMN JERUSALEM.

Trade and Commerce Are Confined to Life's Necessities.

Jerusalem is a city of surprises. It is, -apart from its sacred associations, an intensely interesting spot, even to travelers who are already saturated with the hitherto unfamiliar and surprising charms of Cairo, Athens and Constantinople. Its size can best be expressed by the statement that the journey round the outside of its walls may be made by an ordinarily rapid walker in the space of an hour.

Its houses are small, irregular in shape, squalid and mean. Its streets, if streets they can be called, are not named or numbered; they are never cleaned, and During 1898 the number of immigrants in many instances are steep, crooked, narrow, roughly paved; and they are crease of nearly 1,000 as compared with vaulted over by the buildings on each side of them. Never a pair of wheels A joyous shout from Owen Murphy, a traverse them, and rarely is a horse or donkey seen within the walls.

The halt, the maimed and the blind, the leprous and the wretchedly poor, form the great bulk of the population of Jerusalem, and, with the single exception of the Hebrews, they are persistent

Trade and commerce seem to be conheavy increase over the sum chargeable fined to the bare necessities of life and to dealers in beads and crucifixes. There is but one hotel and one Turkish mer chant, who displays in his little windowless, doorless shop a small assortment of silver charms, trinkets and bric-a-brac to the gaze of the passer-by, and is almost the only shopkeeper who sells anything like luxuries in the place. His customers, of course, are the pilgrims who come to see, and not to worship. Jerusalem is unique as a city. Everything is serious and solemn and severe.

It has no clubs, no public houses, no beer gardens, no concert halls, no thea ters, no lecture rooms, no places of amusement of any kind, no street bands, no wandering musicians, no wealthy or upper classes, no newspapers, no printing presses, no book shops, except one outside the walls for the sale of Bibles, no cheerfulness, no life. No one sings, no one sports, no one laughs in Jerusalem; even the children do not play.
