THE GOAT.

There was a goat in our town And he was wondrous wise, He'd gulp a leather apron down But never touch mince pies.

One day he dined on armor plate, The next he dined on tin, The former made him gather weight. The latter made him thin.

He often ate tomato cans, And bits of steel to boot, And browsed among the pots and And loved a flannel suit.

A couple that was newly wed Came where this goat was at, They took a furnished flat.

One day the wife some biscuit made, sie's convalescence. The goat was passing by, He ate one, he was unafraid, He knew he had to die.

And after he was laid away Where grasses sadly wave, To mark his early grave.

There was a goat in our town, And he was wondrous wise, He gulped a deadly biscuit down Hic jacet, there he lies. HEALTHY LUNGS.
