QUEEN VICTORIA'S PET CATS.

The disposal of Queen Victoria's numerous pets is a matter of no small concern to the persons who are closing up her affairs. The late queen was a great lover of cats. When the court moved it was accompanied by a feline caravan. There were Persian cats. Manx cats, Angora cats, Maltes cats, tabby cais, and uondescripts, and they all traveled in state. They were placed in wooden boxes with an open wire front and had plenty of clean straw to lie on. One Persian cat, of which the queen was especially fond, wears round his neck an elaborate collar, on which appears in silver letters: "I belong to the queen."

The cruel murders recently committed by a couple of black natives in New South Wales have naturally directed increased attention to the present condition of the remnants of the strange mysterious race which formerly peopled the Australian continent. According to Mr. Coghlan, the New South Wales Government Statistician, the aborigines of Australia form a distinct race, and it may be presumed the whole of them throughout the continent sprang from the same stock, although it is remarkable that their languages differ so greatly that tribes within short distances are often quite unable to city, resides Mr. W. GREAT MEN ARE SMOKERS.

Indulgence in the Weed Enjoyed by High and Low Alike.

King Edward has never attempted to hide the fact that he enjoys his "whiff." Once a certain well-known society lady, a violent anti-smoking nuisance, said to his (then) Royal Highness: "Sir, as the leading gentleman in England, do you not think that you ought not only to refrain from smoking yourself, but encourage others to give up smoking?" "Madam," frigidly and emphatically said the Prince, "many years ago I commenced smoking. I have smoked ever since. I enjoy smoking. In all probability, madam, I shall keep on smoking as persistently as "Charley's Aunt" keeps on running."

The Duke of Connaught, on being asked by an American beauty whether he approved of smoking, answered: "Yes, indeed. There are two things which I trust I shall never lose-my honor and my tobacco

When the Khedive of Egypt visited England, some months ago he suffered, it will be remembered, from some throat trouble whick kept him on his yacht for a few days. After a careful examination, Sir Douglas Powell, the great throat specialist, said: "I believe Your Highness does not smoke in any shape or form?" "You are right, sir, I do not smoke.
