It is our painful duty to chronicle the death of another old resident, Mr. John Nelson, who died at his residence las, Sunday morning, at the ripe old age of 86 years. The deceased has been in poor health which confined him to the house for a few years, hence his death was not unexpected at any time. Mr. Nelson, formerly lived in the township Manvers, but about twenty years ago sold a fine farm property and he and his esteemed wife came to reside in the village and have been here ever since that time. The difference went deeper. The divergence was complete. The daughter when grown denounced and abandoned her mother and broke her heart. Whereupon the author says:

There is no more silly and persistent error than the belief of parents that they can influence to any appreciable extent the moral ideas and impulses of their children. These things have their springs in the bases of character; they are the flowers of individuality; and they cannot be altered or affected after birth by the foolishness of preaching. Train up a child in the way that he should go, and when he is old you will find soon enough he will choose his own course for himself.

How true is this? Is heredity "harking back " perhaps for three or four gen_ erations, stronger than environment, than exhortation, than even example? two children of the same parents, subject to the same influences, would seem to show that in many cases the old adages are not true. How far can children really be moulded?
