The War Summary.

Monday, July 18, 1898.

The American flag was hoisted with impressive ceremonies over the municipal buildings of Santiago at noon yesterday.

The difficulty as to the retention of arms by the Spaniards was settled by leaving the decision to the United States Government, the American commissioners reporting in favor of the proposal. Mr. Alger declares that he will refuse his consent.

Arrangements are under way for the transport of the Spanish troops back to Spain. The men will probably start on July 25. Neutral steamers will be employed by preference.

The Americans have decided to ignore the Cubans, and Santiago will be governed by an American military official.

The Porto Rico campaign will now be pushed on actively, and Commodore Watson's ships will be hurried over to assail Spain.

Spain continues calm, the feeling being that the terms granted General Toral were honorable. The Government's policy of repression seems for the moment to be succeeding.

Senator Sagasta has declared that extra-official negotiations have been going on to ascertain the basis on which peace could be concluded. A denial of this statement comes from Washington.

Admiral Cervera and his officers have arrived at Annapolis. The Spanish sailors have been landed at Portsmouth.

Yellow fever in the American Army is causing apprehension, 600 cases being reported; however, the cases are said to be of a mild type. There is great distress among the refugees and inhabitants of Santiago.

Tuesday, July 19, '98. The details of the Porto Rican expedition have been perfected, and Gen. Miles has left Siboney for Washington under orders. Miles in all probability will command the expedition.

President McKinley has ordered that Commodore Watson's squadron for the invasion of the Spanish coast depart as soon as possible, and every effort is being made to complete the necessary preparations.

The Spanish in the surrendered district around Santiago have burned the lighthouses, spiked the cannon and exploded the powder magazines as a protest against Gen. Toral's capitulation—Globe.

France, Germany, Russia and Austria form a concert of powers to settle terms of peace between Spain and the United States. In such a contingency complications with England may ensue, and probably Japan. Uncle Sam will not likely be dictated to by the powers in this matter.

"Is it peace or is it war?" Admiral Dewey sends this message to the German Admiral, who objects to his vessels being stopped. If they are at peace he demanded that the German warships here pursue a different course. If they are at war he wanted to know if, so he could govern himself accordingly. The German contention is that a ship should not be stopped after the first time. Admiral Dewey replied that Manila is a blockaded port and that he would continue to have all ships communicated with when he desired, whether on the first or the hundredth time of entering the bay.

Yousouf, the Terrible Turk.

The Champion Wrestler of the Orient, who met Death in the Wreck of the Burgogne off Sable Island.

The New York Journal, in an article referring to the career and death of Yousouf, the Turkish wrestler, said: "In his last great bout, wherein he staked his fortune and his life against an unknown foe, the giant of Scutari fought and lost. It is the end of a unique career."

"As in all Oriental fighters, the brute forces dominated the intellect. Yousouf was not an educated man. His colossal strength was his sole boast. Of the science of wrestling, as it is known to the trained athletes of the Muldoon and Roeler school, he was blissfully ignorant."

"And yet, the Turk was never beaten, True, the Frenchman, Lamair, and the Jap, Madochi, as well as the Wisconsin Goliath, Lewis, got decisions over him. But all were on technicalities."

"Yousouf was a magnificent animal of the eastern type, but he lacked the reserve and generalship of a true athlete. When things did not go his way he lost all control of himself and became a wild beast. He then lost his games repeatedly on fouls."

"The Turk was a native of Scutaria, a grimy and fanatical town opposite Constantinople, and commanding magnificent view of the city of Sultans."

"He began wrestling at an early age, and having won victories over men famed in the science throughout his native districts. Yousouf was honored with a 'command' to appear before his king."

"Under imperial patronage he made little tours into neighboring provinces, then farther into Egypt, Algeria, Greece and the Ionian Islands, always returning with the green bay of the victor."

"Yousouf then undertook to become master of Europe and Asia, which he did, throwing representatives from countries all the way from Japan to Germany."

"After that, America. Here he found difficulties. He found that wrestling was circumscribed by rules, and that if the wrestlers ignored them so much the worse for them. He met Roeler at Madison Square Garden and Roeler left off the platform. Later at the Metropolitan opera house the Turk lost his temper because he could not stir Roeler from all fours and was disciplined. Then he met the spectacular Spartan, Heraklides, and strangled him into insensibility. Then to the west he went and lost to Lewis on a foul."

"In fact the mammoth Turk was a semi-savage, and there was no use trying to make a straight wrestler of him. W. A. Brady, his manager, lost on Yousouf's fouling where he stood to win if the Turk kept himself within bounds. With the $5,000 and more which he under the waves, hugged miserly to the last, Yousouf might have started a cafe in his beloved city of Scutari and filled it with cross-legged countrymen smoking nargillahs, whom he could have entertained with his wonderful exploits in foreign parts. That goodly sum would have been a fortune there."

"Here, however, the little band would soon have disappeared to satisfy the Turk's appetite, which was colossal. It kept himself and his friends eternally poor. He ate 20 meals a day, and each was a royal barbecue. He drank coffee out of a soup tureen, grounds and all, Turkish style. He ate with his fingers and worried because he had not hands enough to keep pace with the knowings of hunger. He sailed second-class. It was characteristic of the man who was a miser for the benefit of his rapacious appetite."

TRAMP STOLE HIS CLOTHES.

A Twelfth of July Episode. Between 10 and 11 o'clock on July 12th a tired stranger from Cayvan township, overcome by an injudicious mixture of Orangeism and bad whiskey, strolled across the railway track near the station and sought repose in the tall grass of an unrequented lot. His loud snoring must have disclosed his whereabouts to a passing tramp, and the consequences were disastrous and embarrassing—to the sleeper. When he awakened he failed to recognize himself for a time, nor could he find anything about his person to aid in the work of identification, because the rustler had swapped clothing with him, and left him looking a perfect scarecrow and liable to arrest as the toughest-looking hobo seen in Lindsay for some time. After making certain necessary changes in his ragged garb the Cayvan man made his way to the station, where his appearance created much merriment, and told his story to Station Agent Eaton and Trainmaster Stephens. It so happened that the latter had seen the tramp near the station and had warned him to leave the company's premises, but in the afternoon had again observed him passing north of the station arrayed in a new suit of clothes, and mentally observing that some person had been over-charitable, he dismissed all thought of the circumstance. While the man was fumbling in his pockets, one of his coat he found a note, which the tramp had written, and was thus enabled to get home on the evening train.
