WINTER WHEAT. Results of Tests Made by Ontario Farmers.

Eighty varieties of winter wheat have been grown in the Experimental Department of the Ontario Agricultural College for at least five years in succession, and the power to withstand the cold weather, strength of straw, amount of rust, yield of grain, weight per measured bushel, etc., of each variety have been carefully determined each year. The results of these practical field experiments at the College form the basis for the selection of a few of the very best kinds for testing on the farms throughout the Province. The co-operative experiments of the past few years of dentistry successfully performed. show that those varieties which have given the best average results in the experiments conducted at the College for five years in succession have nearly always given good satisfaction on the farms of the Province.

In the autumn of 1898, seven varieties of winter wheat were used for the co-operative tests. These were divided into three sets with three varieties in being used in all the sets as a basis by which the results of all the varieties could be compared with one another.

out Ontario, consequently the number of complete tests is not so large as usexperimenters before the 12th inst. at which time we started to work up the summary results in order to place the at as early a date as possible. It is interesting to know that these seventytwo good reports came from no less than twenty-seven counties and districts in Ontario, including Essex in the West, Carleton in the East, and the District of Algoma in the North. As we sow about one million acres of wheat in Ontario each autumn, the results of the winter wheat experiments conducted on the different farms throughout the Province are of inestimable value to those interested in wheat growing: The following table gives the comparative yield of straw and grain per acre of the varieties of winter wheat tested on seventy-two farms in 1899: Straw Grain
