Surely there is no necessity to enlarge upon this aspect of the industrial question. The fact remains that white men are clamorous for Kaffirs' work at Kaffir pay in this most expensive city in the world -Johannesburg.

I saw more idle men in Johannes-Durg than I saw in Melbourne or Sydney during the worst period of the financial crisis ten years ago. Of course, the occasion is exceptional. but once the white worker proclaims his distress and dependence capital has a notorious habit of making the best of its opportunity. The mine owners are already masters of the industrial position, and it may take a revolution to dislodge them.

Another matter to be taken into consideration is that members of irregulars, having elected to remain in the country, and having quickly exhausted their pay-in this most costly country-are swelling the army of competition for work and wages pro-
