The gala day has come. From all the world the people are pouring into Verona. Men, women and children, orators and senators, great men and small, thousands upon thousands come until the first gallery is full, and the second, the third, the fourth, the fifth, -all the way up to the twentieth, all the way up to the thirtieth, all the way up to the fortieth. Every place is filled. Immensity of audience sweeping the great circle. Silence! The time for the contest has come. A Roman official leads forth the victim into the arena. Let him get his sword with firm grip in his right hand. The 25,000 sit breathlessly watching. I hear the door at the side of the arena creak open. Out plunges the half-starved lion, his tongue athirst for blood, and, with a roar that brings all the galleries to their feet he rushes against the lame and bleeding, slinks back toward the side of the arena; then, rallying his wasting strength, he comes up with a shout that makes the city tremble.

"A Kiss or Your Life."

Good-looking women recently passing through the main street of Montreuil, outside Paris, were subjected to unpleasant attentions by an amorous lunatic. This person went about brandishing a dagger and when he saw a pretty woman he asked astonished females so addressed complied told him in emphatic language to go away, and they had narrow escapes from being stabbed. The maniac, whose antics drew a large crowd, was finally captured by means of a heavy coal sack, which was
