The stallions at present owned on the Island when mated to good mares will certainly produce colts that will sell well. A reasonably heavy mare or good conformation is required. There were instances on the grounds where Clyde stallions had been bred to light mares of standard bred blood. The progeny were nondescripts of no particular use, and this is the general result of such violent crossing. Carriage Horses.-The distinction between carriage horses and roadsters is evidently not well understood by exhibition managements or people in the Maritime Provinces. These are two distinct types of horses, and should not be judged in the same class. There should be provision at least for a single roadster in harness and a matched pair. The distinction between roadsters and carriage horses is not a matter of size, or of breeding.
