SCHOOL TOPICS FROM THE EDUCA-TIONAL JOURNAL. Her Method.

A young teacher who has had great success with a class of "ragamuffins" in the worst quarter of a large city, was asked at a school teachers' meeting to tell something of the method by which she had transformed the lawless street urchins into respectable little citizens in so many cases.

IE OF OUR CES:

"I haven't any method, really," said the young woman modestly. "It is only that I try to make the boys like me, and I say 'don't' just as seldom as I possibly can in my work with them. They had learned to lie, steal, and fight, but truth, honesty, and courtesy were unknown terms. So I began by telling them a story every morning about some boy who had done a brave, honest, or kin'l thing, and held him up for their admiration. And after a while I asked them to 'save up' good things they had seen or done to tell at these morning talks. hoping that a 'thank you,' had rewarded his first attempt in the right direction.

"'You young scamp, you'd have made off with that if I hadn't kept my eye on you?' said the boy in the same jerky fashion.

"'And what did you do then?' I asked in fear and trembling.

"'Didn't do nothin'. but just come along to school,' said the boy soberly. 'I reckoned he didn't know no better; prob'ly he hadn't had no such teachin' as I've got,' and he lapsed into silence with an air of perfect satisfaction.

The young teacher sat down as modestly as she had risen. It was unanimously voted that whatever might be said for other methods, hers—which she did not even call a method—had commended itself.
